MORE IMPORTANT NEWS. Captain Crow, of the ship Liberty, has favored the editors of the New-York Gazette with London papers to the 8th, and Liverpool to the 9th ult. inclusive. These papers contain the following highly important intelligence—

LONDON, March 7. Dispatches have been received from Petersburg, in which, it is said, the emperor Alexander gives the most solemn pledge that he will not listen to any terms of peace until the French are driven entirely out of the Polish dominions; nor will he sanction any that may be agreed upon with Prussia, under the mediation of Austria, that has not for their object the immediate evacuation of the whole of the German dominions occupied by the enemy since the commencement of the present campaign. The latter part of this may, however, be in some respects incorrect.

A vessel arrived from Memel, after an uncommonly quick passage. The master, we understand, brings intelligence that an account had been received at Memel of Bonaparte having set out for Paris, having previously conferred the command of the army on Massena. It is not improbable that such a report might have reached that town, but we entertain considerable doubts of its accuracy.

SUNDAY, March 8. (Second Edition.)

We have the infinite pleasure in being able to announce the arrival of a messenger, this morning, from Petersburg, with the official accounts of a succession of important victories obtained by the Russians over the French, between the 1st and 12th February.

Mr. Vick, who is the bearer of these joyful tidings, left Petersburg on the 17th of February, and Gottenburg on the 1st instant, on board the Amity Packet, which was dispatched for his conveyance. From him we have the happiness to learn, that general Benningsen has officially announced several victories obtained by him over Bonaparte, in one of which the French lost upwards of twenty thousand men, a large portion of their artillery, and twelve standards. Six of these latter had been triumphantly exhibited on the parade of Petersburg, previous to Mr. Vick's departure.

A French general has deserted the sinking fortune of Bonaparte, and has arrived at St. Petersburg. He reports, and his statement is confirmed from various quarters, that Bonaparte, since his invasion of Poland, has lost upwards of one hundred thousand men!

Mr. Vick was detained at Gottenburg two days by contrary wind.

The following note was circulated in the ministerial circles, shortly after Mr. Vick's arrival: "A king's messenger arrived this morning, with dispatches from St. Petersburg, communicating the official details of the operations of the Russian army in Prussia. It appears that the ardent and persevering gallantry of the Russian general has been crowned with signal success. For several successive days he attacked the French army, always to advantage but in the last affair, to their decisive defeat, they having on that occasion lost upwards of twenty thousand men, twelve eagles and several pieces of cannon."

"Great rejoicings have taken place at Petersburg and the city was illuminated at the departure of the messenger." The Gazette contains an order in council, dated the 4th, placing Curacao, in point of commercial relations, on a footing with our other West-India islands.

Yesterday we received Dutch and French papers by the American ship Medford, arrived in the river from Rotterdam, which have furnished us with some articles of importance. Government at the same time received dispatches from the continent by the Dorset packet, arrived at Harwich. The latter are stated to announce another action between the Russians and French, in which the grand duke of Berg was killed. We have before us an extract of a letter received by a merchant in the city from his brother at Warsaw, mentioning Murat's death, and that the body had been received in that city with great pomp, and as we understand, buried there. We incline, however, to think, from some allusion to the scene of action, that Murat, should he have fallen, must have been killed in the battle of Bylen, or in some affair immediately following it.

Letters were yesterday received in town from Dantzic, which on Thursday arrived at Hull, bringing accounts from thence to the 26th ult. of great rejoicings having taken place there, on occasion of the victories obtained by the Russians over the French, in Warmia, up to the 11th. The left and centre of the Russians were then posted on the lakes, and the right extended beyond the Alle.

The French corps under general Lefebvre has been defeated by a body of Prussians near Marienwerder.

Although the French have succeeded in restoring tranquility in Hussia, insurrections appear to have broken out in various other parts of Germany, which cannot fail to embarrass Bonaparte, either in exposing his supplies from France to danger, or in requiring for their protection a greater force than in his present circumstances he can afford for such service. Witteravia and the banks of the Main are in the hands of the insurgents; and in Weimar, Gotha, Coburg, and most of the neighboring duchies, an extensive and organized system of revolt prevails.

The Austrian army in Galicia comprises upwards of one hundred thousand men; and the frontiers of Moravia and Bohemia are crowded with troops who have cut off all communication with Saxony, Silesia, &c. The export of provisions to the French army in Poland has been discontinued, and some Jewish merchants and others, by whom it was carried on, have been arrested and sent in chains for trial. This measure is stated to have been adopted on a strong remonstrance from the Russian minister.

The Austrians are collecting a strong corps on the Bavarian frontiers, under the orders of one of the archdukes.

All officers in the Austrian service on leave of absence, &c have received orders to join their respective corps. On the departure of Buonaparte from Warsaw, Baron Vincent announced to Talleyrand his intention to return to Vienna, and was with difficulty induced to prolong his stay in Poland for another fortnight. The Baron's mission, independent of the restoration of Brannau, had for its object to demand from Buonaparte an explanation as to his intentions in regard to Poland, and a revocation of the promises as held out to the inhabitants of that country by Dombrowsky. Bonaparte has evaded the discussion of these points; and in one of his interviews with Baron Vincent, he warmly expressed impatience and offence at the Baron's impertinence on the subject.

The Russians continue to advance in Turkey almost without opposition. It appears by letters from Panscova of the 28th of January, that the advanced corps of the Russian army had already penetrated into Albania, and that the Mountaineers of Bassa, Podinn, &c. had joined him in immense numbers. The islands of Curzuolo, Brassa, and Lissa, have fallen into the hands of the Imperialists, and Lessina, has been invested. Bulgaria, Servia, and Albania, as well as Moldavia and Wallachia, are now in the virtual occupation of the Russians. The Turks are not capable of opposing any serious obstacles to the progress of the Russians; their army is an undisciplined insurgent mob, more dangerous to the generals appointed to conduct it, than to the enemy to whom it is to be confronted.

General Kellerman is arrived at Hamburg, where, it is said, he is to command. General Benningsen, who so ably commanded the Russian armies in Prussia and Poland, was formerly in the British service.
