

and pursued them till they got under the cannon. The St. Petersburg regiments and the Whelan regiment of infantry on this occasion took two eagles, and the enemy in his retreat left behind him 22 pieces of heavy artillery.

"The attack directed against our right wing was obstructed by General Sacken's flankers. General Bagovost, who had occupied the villages of Serpalen with a detachment of the advanced guard, was attacked at break of day, and merely defended himself by his flankers. But as the attacking columns hastened to his assistance with the regiment of Lithuanian Uhlans, and the regiment of the cuirassiers of Little Prussia; they drove the enemy back, who retreated in the utmost confusion to a forest. The same regiments then attacked with the same decisive success other columns of the French infantry, which supported by cavalry made a movement towards our centre, threw them into the greatest confusion, killed 800 and took 67 prisoners, among whom are ten officers. General Pahlen attacked with the brigade of cavalry of Gen. Korff, several French columns which were marching against General Larken's division, threw them into disorder, and took one Eagle. The regiment of hussars of Isan, and the regiment of dragoons of Courland, also attacked the enemy with great success. The enemy finding themselves repulsed with considerable loss, they united their whole force, and formed in strong columns, which moved towards our left wing with a view of turning it. General Kagavost being too weak to resist a force so very superior to his, found himself necessitated to abandon and set fire to the village of Scapallen, which he had hitherto occupied, in order to take another position. His cavalry, posted in front, attacked the enemy several times, but was obliged to fall back behind our left wing. In the mean time, the enemy continued to receive considerable reinforcements, pursuing his plan of turning our left. Gen. Hamsen, who had already sent some reinforcements to Gen. Bagovost, detachments of Uhlans and Kosrona to reinforce his left wing, and ordered the village of Klem-Sangarten to be occupied by the regiment of Hsian. Count Osterman finding himself opposed by a very superior force, he deemed it necessary to reserve his left wing, which was soon joined by general Bagovost, against whom the above French columns proceeded already reached our flank. The enemy had already turned our left wing and forced the divisions of Sarken and Osterman to retrograde movement, by concentrating all his attacks against this point. I now ordered my horse artillery to advance. Gen. Kutysoff & Col. Termols erected their batteries on a height with a numerous artillery and flankers, & had and kept up a brisk fire on the enemy, that they halted a few moments, abandoned the farm of Ankappen, which they had occupied, in great haste, and fled in the utmost confusion. At the same time, general Tschaplitz, who commanded a detachment of horse, attacked the enemy in the village of Kutschitten, drove them out of it and almost entirely destroyed the enemies cavalry. During these transactions, Lieut. Gen. L'Estocq arrived in the field of battle with the Russian corps under his command, and two Russian regiments of foot, and hastened to reinforce our wing. As soon as he had formed a junction, with the division of general Kamensky, and the detachment of general Tschaplitz he marched towards the enemy, whom he cannonaded with a well directed fire from his battery. He then made a rapid movement against the left wing of the enemy, with a view of turning it, and pursued them until the fall of night, which forced him to relinquish a further pursuit. The arrival of Lieutenant general L'Estocq, and the activity with which he performed his movements, contributed much to secure to us the fortune of the day. While the batteries of our left wing were then keeping up a brisk cannonade against the enemy, and Lieutenant general L'Estocq pursued them; the enemy, although they were in possession of the village of Shviditten, did not dare to attack our right wing, merely composed of the division general Tontschkoff, on account of being overpowered by the fire of a strong Prussian battery, which general Fock had established a height. At the fall of night ordered the enemy to be driven from the village of Shviditten, where they sustained a considerable loss. The Cossacks behaved with distinguished gallantry, during the action, and killed 470 prisoners.

This destructive battle commenced on 7th at three o'clock in the afternoon, ended the following day at midnight. Loss of the enemy consists, by their own confession, in 30,000 killed and 12,000 wounded; 2,000 Frenchmen have been made prisoners of war, and 19 Eagles taken. Our amounts to twelve thousand killed, and 20 wounded; fourteen French generals are killed or wounded; nine of our generals are wounded, but most of them so slightly that they have already joined the army, bear testimony to the signal and persevering valor displayed by our imperial majesties troops, and to assure you that your y while it has thus acquired immortal y has given another memorable proof of a nation may achieve, which fights efence of its native country, and is ready to sacrifice its blood and life for the attainment of the noble purpose of an adored monarch. In vain did Bonaparte lavish with almost profusion all his vast resources; in did he incite the courage of his soldiers, and in vain did he sacrifice so great a of his army. The gallantry and persevering valor of the Russians withstood all his efforts, and wrested from him a victory long and severely contested.

"Having remained master of the field of battle, I continued there that night, and weighed the measures which I should further have to pursue; and I have reason to congratulate myself on the determination I took to march to Konigsberg. I was there able to supply my army with every thing it stood in need of; after long and glorious exertions it found there relief and repose, while the French army weakened and dispirited, continued under arms. I hoped by this retrograde movement to induce the French army to follow me, but twelve regiments of horse only made this attempt, under the lead of Marshal Murat, and were almost destroyed near Mansfield. After the loss the enemy began to retreat."

End of the Comedy, Mr. Webster will sing "THE MILD OF LOVE."

To which will be added, an entire new serious Melo-Drama, in two acts, called

The Black Castle;

OR, THE SPECTRE OF THE FOREST.

PROSPECTUS OF THE PANTOMIME.

SCENE I.

A distant view of the Black Castle and Rustic Tomb, of the murdered "Ravia," which has been raised by the peasants to her memory; a train of male and female peasants enter in procession, strewing flowers round the tomb, they are interrupted by the arrival of Asphar, who is borne in a palanquin, surrounded by troopers, &c. torn by treachery from the Turkish army, he alights with savage exultation and dismisses his train. Asphar and Cornu remain, he is about to follow, when the inscription on the tomb attracts his attention, he starts with horror, and sends Cornu for an implement to cut it, he is about to do so, when the inscription changes to letters in blood, Cornu attempts to conceal them by throwing a handkerchief before them, which is instantly covered with blood. Asphar driven almost to despair, Cornu endeavors to lead him from the place—after many entreaties on the part of Cornu, they enter the Castle.

SCENE II.

Castle Hall. Moral and Alouk enter, the latter has been entrusted with the care of the lady Lamora, who has escaped, they are terrified at the idea of meeting their lord, who has threatened them with death if they suffered her to escape. Dugle horn announces his approach.

SCENE III.

Gothic Apartment. Moorish soldiers ranged in order to receive Asphar, who enters with Cornu. Despair and horror are depicted on his countenance, he takes no notice of the surrounding objects, he bestows to Cornu as if he had something to impart, his eye rests on the guards—shrieks within himself at his unguarded conduct—bids Cornu to depart.

SCENE IV.

Cave. Lamora, who escaped from the Castle, is discovered asleep. Alam and Serina, who are in love with each other, enter as by appointment. Lamora wakes at their approach, and is about to sacrifice them for her safety, they supplicate and offer to conduct her to their parent's cottage, she puts herself under their protection.

SCENE V.

Castle Hall. Cornu and Moroc enter on their way to Asphar's chamber, to inform him of the escape of lady Lamora.

SCENE VI.

Asphar's chamber, he is disturbed by visionary dreams—Cornu and Moroc enter with trepidation, and in a fearful manner inform him of Lamora's escape; he is in a rage, wounds Moroc, and sends him in search of her, with a charge not to return without her on the forfeit of their lives, he is engaged at the loss of his victim, and retires to his couch.

ACT II—SCENE I.

Inside of Conrad's Cottage. Lamora enters with Conrad, Alam and Serina, after relating the manner of her escape and expressing her gratitude for their protection, is suddenly interrupted by a noise without, at this instant the door is broke to pieces—they stand petrified. Cornu and Moroc enter with savage triumph, seize Lamora—Alam and Conrad endeavor to rescue her, Cornu and Moroc kill Alam and Conrad; Lamora faints in the arms of Cornu, who bears her off in his arms.

SCENE II.

A Wood. Turkish March—Cazem and Simoustapha enter with Soldiers and Peasants, they determine to attack the castle, aided by the peasants—repair to the appointed place.

SCENE III.

A Splendid Apartment fitted up in the Eastern style, in which Lamora is confined, having been brought here senseless—she starts from the sofa and looks round in despair; at this instant a noise is heard of distant thunder with a violent crash; on the panel of the door appears the following distich:

"Ere thrice self-struck, the castle bell resound,

"Sorrow shall cease and you with joy be crown'd."

She appears embarrassed, and treats it as a supernatural fancy, at this moment a voice superhumanly calls to Asphar and repulse him with firmness; he enters, with many protestations of love, endeavors to win her; she treats him with contempt, he is enraged; is about to sacrifice her to his fury, when little Muley (the page) rushes in and implores him to spare her, he spurns the child from him and stamps violently for a guard. Cornu and Alouk enter, he snatches the child from the embraces of Lamora, and throws him to Cornu who bears him off. Asphar orders Moroc to draw his sabre and dispatch her, he with some feeling refuses: Asphar kills Moroc and leaves Lamora senseless in custody of slaves, she recovering, and reflecting on her situation, is born of lifeless by the guard.

SCENE IV.

Castle and Tomb. Simoustapha and Cazem accompany the Peasants in their evening visits to the tomb. Cazem is driven to despair on perceiving the inscription on the tomb. A Storm. Peasants retire: Cazem and Simoustapha remain; the letters change to blood, and the spectre of "Ravia" rises from the tomb points to a wound in her bosom and to the castle, after viewing Cazem, she retires to the tomb and sinks; Cazem with reluctance is forced off by Simoustapha, after swearing vengeance on Asphar.

SCENE V.

The Cave of Destruction. Cornu enters, looking about with caution, and harkening to Alouk, who enters with the child; they throw to see who shall kill Muley; it falls to the lot of Alouk; he is about to plunge the dagger in the breast of Muley, but wounds Cornu in the arm; he, incensed at this, challenges Alouk to fight: a furious battle ensues, and Cornu is killed. Alouk conceals the child in the cave; is interrupted by the approach of Cazem and Simoustapha. Alouk guards the mouth of the cave. Cazem, seeing the dead body, & supposing Alouk to be the cause, is about to kill him, when Muley runs out and implores him to spare Alouk. Cazem recognizes Muley for his son; an explanation takes place, he thanks Alouk for his conduct; they depart on their way to the castle.

SCENE VI.

A Dungeon. Lamora and two guards asleep: she with caution examines the dungeon; as she ascends the steps towards the door, the bell tolls one fearful of the sound waking the guards, she retires to her bed of straw. Asphar enters, and once more offers her protection, provided she will become his mistress; she repulses him with scorn; he is going to kill her; the bell tolls two; Spectre rises; he is appalled, a voice is heard admonishing Lamora not to despair. Loud huzzas are heard without; the doors are shattered to pieces; Cazem and Simoustapha enter, and overcome Asphar after a desperate battle. The Turks are seen defeating the Moors by torch-light.

Castle in flames—Bell tolls three—Asphar is put to death.
