From a Paris paper of the 14th of April. CONSTANTINOPLE, 10th March. ENGLISH EXPEDITION.

The English ambassador, Mr. Arbuthnot, perceiving that he alone could not succeed in frightening the Grand Signior and his ministry, ventured to go himself in person and bring the English squadron with which he had threatened the divan for so long a time. It was in the afternoon of the 20th of February that intelligence was received here of that fleet, consisting of seven ships of the line, two of which were 110's, three 84's and two 74's, besides two frigates of 44 and two fire ships, having passed the straits of the Dardanelles almost without any resistance. A few hours afterwards, it was seen casting anchor within 3 leagues of Constantinople.

The appearance of these forces, which found us in some measure unprovided, excited at first an unfovorable sensation upon the minds of the inhabitants. The divan itself seemed uneasy and irresolute. A great consternation spread throughout the

The French ambassador, without suffering himself to be moveed by the effects of that crisis, threw himself as it were upon the helm, undertook to inspire courage and confidence, and to drag out an order for de-fending the city. He succeeded. From that moment the French military obtained every thing from the good will of the ministry and the Turkish engineers. The people seeing in the morning the disposition which had been made during the night, showed themselves disposed to second this movement of energy.

The preparations for defence could not yet, however, be very considerable. They consisted only in a battery of 13 pieces of cannon, hastily thrown up before Tophana, another battery of 10 cannons placed on the coast of Asia, and lastly in 4 or 5 cannons which had been put upon an advanced tower. All this might have incommoded the English squadron, had it entered ; but not being supported by the cross fires of the point of the Seraglio, would have been far from sufficient to preserve the city, the Turkish fleet, the magazine, &c.

Happily the English admiral, though he had with him sir Sidney Smith and fire ships, knew not how to take advantage of this moment; he suffered himself to be driven into a kind of negociation, which the Porte carefully kept in suspence until she found herself in a situation to repulse every aggression. The dispositions that were making soon put her in a state to raise her tone, and she rejected the odious propositions of the enemy. We had at that time 300 pieces of cannon in battery, mortars & howitzers-3 ovens for red hot bullets, in full activity-200,000 men, armed with rifles and fusees, and animated with the best spirit-80 gun shallops, forming the advanced gward of 9 ships of the line-six heavy frigates and six corvettes in the road, and five large ships in front of the fort.

All this has contributed no litte to shorten e negociation. The English admira judging, no doubt, from these dispositions that similar measures would be taken to shut the passage of the Dardanelles against him, hastened, after he had reconnoitered our position, to make his retreat. He has passed the Dardanelles, but the Turkish garrison, animated by the example of the capital, fired desperately from the only battery which time had allowed them to erect there. It disabled and retook the corvette which the English had taken on their pas sage, and it sunk a polacre loaded with ammunition. Four days later, and the enemy would not have come out so easily. The English ambassador had, in his negociations with the divan, demanded as preliminaries, that the Porte should turn away the French ambassador and the whole legation; that all hostilities should from that moment cease with Russia ; that every armament, fortification, and erection of batteries, should be immediately suspended at Constantinople; that the treaty of alliance with England should be renewed : that a treaty of alliance with Russia should be concluded ; that an English and Russian garrison should be established at the Dardanelles and in the castles of the Bosphorus ; that an English garrison should be established at Alexandria, and a Russian garrision in one of the Morea ; and lastly, that there should be put, immediately at the disposal of the Englishh admiral, to be employed in the service of Great Britain, fifteen ships of the line and ten frigates victalled for one year. After having announced that Mr. Arbuthnots's mission was at an end, and notified the blockading of Constantinople, the English admiral declared that if the above preliminaries were not accepted he would forcibly enter the port, set fire to the town, &c. He has not obtained any thing of his demands, and he has returned, well convinced, no doubt, that he would not be able at present to come to dictate conditions to the Sublime Porte, with anaval armament of forty sail. This success is wholly owing to general Sebastiani ; and it is easy to perceive, by the conditions which the English had come to dictate from what misfortunes and opprowium he has preserved the Turks. He has given proof in this instance, of a courage, presence of mind, character and resolution, above all praise. Every Frenchman has more or less seconded him ; each of them on this occasion, made himself an engineer, a cannonier, or a mechanist. The day after the appearance of the English, a captain du Genie, and two captains of artillery of the army of Dalmatia, very of protunely arrived at Constantinople.-They immediately went to work and were of great help. Chance brought also the next day a Brench cannonicr that had been driven away from Bagdad through the intrigues "of the English ; he was immediately put in the way to avenge himself. E. very Frenchman was night and day at the batteries.

The grand Seignior, the ministers, the Janissaries, the cannoniers, and the whole of the inhabitants, loudly acknowledge that it is to the French they owe their salvation. And in truth they are treated at this moment with a deference, a friendship, and even a kind of respect, not common on the part of the Turks.

It is but justice also to say, that after the first moment of uneasiness and consternati-on was over, the attitude of the Turks was very remarkable for its calmness and courage. As soon as the Grand Seignior had manifested the intention of resisting the enemy to the last extremity, all the ministers, all the grandees of the state, took the immediate resolution to repair each of them to a battery to encourage and excite the workmen. They at first stood in the open air, then in small tents, some of them under old sheds, during six days, night and day, without leaving it for an instant.

French engineers and officers have just set off for the Bosphorus, for the purpose of determining upon proper spots for batteries. They will go from thence to the Dardanelles for the same object. The Grand Seignior has given the formal order that every thing determined by the French ambassador should receive an immediate and punctual execution. From this disposition of his highness, Gen. Sebastiani will cause the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus, which are the two keys of the capital, to be put in a state capable of resisting every aggression on the part of England or of Russia.

The Grand Seignior, during the six days the English have been here, has given an example of courage and devotedness the most absolute. He has not gone to rest one single night. Every morning he would go to encourage the people at work, and would kindly smile on every Frenchman he met. He caused the gardens of the Seraglio to be opened, to have batteries erected there, and had even offered, if it had been deemed necessary, to have batteries placed at his Haram.

The city of Constantinople offered on every point an extraordinary spectacle,-From the dispositions and the sort of exaltation with which the inhabitants were observed to be animated, it would have been a desirable thing that the English should have persisted in their enterprize. Their fleet would never have repassed the Dardenelles.

REMARKS

Of the London Courier of the 17th of April. on Bonaparte's Message.

Paris papers have arrived to the 12th, Dutch to the 14th, and Hamburg to the 4th. Intelligence more important as well as more pleasing has not have arrived for some time, than that which is contained in. these papers. We now see the beneficial effects of the noble resistance made by Russia, in the altered language of Bonaparte, in the difficulties in which he proves himself to be involved, and in the fresh measures he is obliged to have recourse to. That willing instrument of tyranny, the senate, has been convoked, and a message from Bonaparte laid before them, with the report of the minister of war, enforcing the necessity of calling out, immediately the conscription of 1808. The conscription of 1807 has not been called out more than four months, and yet he feels himself obliged to call out the conscription of 1808; an incontrovertible proof is thus afforded of the losses his armies have sustained in the conflicts with the Russians, and of the inadequacy of his present force to atchieve any thing decisive aga.nst an enemy, whom, not three months ago, he loaded with every epithet of scorn. and contempt. In order, however, to remove every idea of this fresh levy being mecessary to repair the losses he has sustained, he states the amount of men killed, in all the battles, from the battle of Jena to the battle of Eylau, to be no more than 14,000 men !!! Credat! Yet with a loss so triffing in comparison with that of the powers opposed to him, whose armies, he says, have either been annihilated or dispersed-after having, as he says, 'taken upwards of 800 pieces of cannon on the field of battle, sent 4000 to France, and made upwards of 200,000 men prisoners-after all these successes, he finds his force insufficient, though he states it to be not 30,000 less than it was when he began the contest with Prussia and Russia, whose armies were then entire, and who in prisoners alone have sustained a loss of 200,000 men ! Another motive which he urges is, that England has resolved upon. an extraordinary levy of 200,000 men. But the real causes of his calling out the conscription, we may be sure, are the losses he has sustained, the success of our operations against Turkey, and the increasing difficulties by which he is surrounded. He endeavors to reconcile the people of France, who hold the conscription in the highest detestation, by saying that the new conscripts shall not enter at once into the fatigues of war, but be permitted to remain at home till they are instructed in military manœuvers. But the people know him too well to rely upon " his promises-when once the levies are raised, he will order them off to the armies without any regard to the terms or pledges upon which they were raised. The altered language of Bonaparte is an-other proof of the difficulties of his situation. He now offers peace to England, to Russia, and to Prussia; and he who bas to reconquer in Poland, all the Spanish, French and Dutch colonies taken by us, and to establish the freedom of the seas, is ready to give back Berlin to the king of Prussia, restore the eight millions of Germans conquered by him to their tranquility, and to make peace with us and Russia, on the terms offered last summer. Not a word is said of re establishing the kingdom of Poland. Brest and Antwerp have been declared in a state of siege-for what reason? Great discontent is said to prevail in the interior of France, particularly in Brittany.
