More British Aggression!

On Monday the 27th ult. arrived at Norwich, (Conn.) the mate and three people belonging to the schr. Betsey, captain Cary, which left that place a few weeks since on a fishing voyage. They state that several days after their departure, they fell in with a British cutter mounting 8 twelve pounders and 14 swivels, who after firing three guns, which passed very near them, boarded, armed with pistols and cutlasses—after considerable abuse they ransacked her hold, starting barrels of cider, beans, provisions, &c. Not content with this, these myrri-dons cut their cod lines in pieces, rendering the Betsey completely unfit for her intended voyage.

And to complete the whole, the crew were all (except the captain) carried on board the cutter and detained 24 hours, without any thing to eat or drink. The schr. has arrived at Plymouth.

[Norwich paper.]

From the Washington Federalist.

We are indebted to a friend in town for a Bermuda Gazette of the 18th ult. from which we copy the following remarks on the outrage committed by the British ship of war Leopard upon the Chesapeake.
These remarks are worthy the greater consideration for having been written, as we are told, either by the governor or attorney-general of Bermuda. Should the government of England insist upon the right here contended for, that of searching national vessels, we see not how a war between the two countries can be avoided. To concede the right, on our part, would be to surrender our independence. National ships, we believe, are and ever have been considered as national territory; and any attack on them must be considered equally an act of war with the invasion of our country.

A considerable sensation has been excited in the United States, in consequence of the attack made on the 23d June, by his majesty's ship Leopard, upon the U. S. frigate Chesapeake, to recover four men who had deserted from H. M. ship Melampus, and who (though regularly claimed by our minister, from the executive of the U. States) were refused to be restored. It would be premature in us to offer many comments upon this transaction; of which we have only a partial account from the American prints. It cannot however escape observation, that, even in this partial account, it is left doubtful whether the seamen were all native Americans. The conclusion to be drawn from the American papers is that all or at least some of the men were British subjects; for one account mentions that two, anther that three, of the men were Americans; and the U. States' Gazette fairly admits, that it is doubtful whether the men were native Americans or not. But this paper observes, that admitting them to be British subjects, the British commander had no right to take them by force out of the Chesapeake. If this be the issue between the two countries it will not require much discussion to settle it. The right of reclaiming her own seamen, wherever they may be found, is what Great-Britain has always asserted, and what we trust she never will relinquish. The right of search is admitted, even by the Americans, to be necessary to maritime capture, can it then with any regard to consistency, be denied that the right of reclaiming seamen is equally necessary to maritime capture? These men, (whatever their national character,) are admitted to have been deserters from the Melampus; they are admitted to have been demanded by our minister, from the American government, who refused to restore them, as did also the captain of the Chesapeake, when they were demanded of him. These admissions appear not merely to justify the British commander, but to have rendered his conduct necessary, to support the character of the nation. With what justice then, or regard to decency, does the Norfolk committee of public safety apply the epithets, assassin-like, piratical and cowardly, to the conduct of captain Humphreys? In their heat these gentlemen appear to have overlooked the meaning of the terms they thought proper to use. Was it assassin like in Humphreys, to send a letter, with orders to commodore Barron, and to allow half an hour to decide whether he would oblige them to be executed?

Was it piratical for the commander of a king's ship to obey the orders of his superior officer? But it seems it was cowardly in Humphreys, to attack the Chesapeake, when her powder was damp, and her cables coiled over her guns.

In the first place, how was Humphreys to imagine that any ship of war could be in a state to make it necessary to plead her insubordination and want of discipline as an excuse for a partial resistance. But in the next place, if Capt. H. had known this, could he have assigned it as a reason to his commanding officers, for not obeying his orders? Commodore Barron had his choice, either to give up the men, or to be fired into; and he preferred the latter.

There have been several instances of captains of British ships of war allowing their crews to be examined by officers of American states ships, in search of deserters.
If congress met immediately, it is not improbable that in their passion they might have declared war. Such an event would be much to be deprecated; but should it unfortunately be the case, it will not be difficult to decide who were the aggressors.

* Their proceedings justify this title.—

Who that reads them would conjecture that there was any thing like regular government at Norfolk?

From the Evening Post.

My communication of Monday last, though written with the best intentions, had an effect which by some may be esteemed injurious to the cause I espoused: for no sooner had the negro-stealers heard of hanging, ducking, &c. than their natural aversion to any other way, caused them to "clear out?" and if any have since visited our city the trade of blood is carried on in a more private manner than it has hitherto been.
It therefore becomes the friends of humanity to be more upon the alert.

I am assured, from the most respectable source, that the highest constituted authority of the city will co-operate to the utmost extent of the laws with any citizen or citizens who can give information on matters of fact relative to this nefarious business.— We can therefore make an appeal to the laws and try their efficacy.

Since the appearance of my essay, a writer in your paper under the signature of "A. W." has taken up the subject. I have read his production with pleasure; and entertained hopes that before this time he would have laid his plan of association before the public, which, I believe, I suggested. As this has not been the case, I respectfully request that you would publish the annexed advertisement, the object of which is to bring the case to issue; in the mean time I should be much pleased to see "A. W.'s" plan, as leading to an immediate organization of any association that may be formed.

To the friends of Humanity.

A meeting of the citizens of Baltimore who view with abhorrence the infamous traffic carried on in this city by unprincipled and wicked men, and are desirous of securing to the unfortunate negro those rights which the laws entitle him to receive, as well as to unite in endeavors to ameliorate his condition, is requested at Fulton's Inn, on Thursday evening next, at half past 7 o'clock, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of forming a society to carry their wishes into effect.

the Federal Gazette, by giving the above advertisement two three insertions, will

JUSTICE.

On Wednesday morning last, the body of a young man genteelly dressed, was found dead on the shore at Wheehawk, near the monument of gen. Hamilton. Information was immediately given to the Coroner, and the body was conveyed to the city of Jersey, where an inquest was held. On examination it appeared that he had shot himself through the head with a ball from a large horse-pistol, which tore off part of his ear.
His name was J. A. Bertell, a foreigner, about the age of 20 years. Two letters were found in his pocket, one addressed to the person who might find his body, the other to a gentleman at Brooklyn. In these letters he signifies his intention of destroying himself—that he was tired of his life—and could not bear the idea of his beloved (whom he styles his Matilda) being in the arms of another.

In one of these letters is his will, bequeathing two-thirds of his property to Matilda, and the remainder to the family of the gentleman above mentioned. The letters are dated the 27th instant, and it is supposed he perpetrated the horrid deed on that day. On Monday afternoon he was seen near the monument with a book in his hand, and, on being observed, drew his hat over his eyes.
The book was found on the ground by his side, and was the "Sorrows of Werter." It lay open at the place where Werter writes to Charlotte—"They are loaded—the clock strikes twelve—I go—Charlotte! Charlotte! farewell! farewell!" That and several other passages in the book, corresponding with his unhappy situation, were marked by him with a pen. [N. Y. Gaz.]

PROPHECIES.

A new edition of a very old book has just been published at Paris: it is entitled, Everlasting Prophecies, from the year 1521 to the end of the world. The academy of sciences, at Paris, is said to have transmitted this little work of 54 pages to the minister Louvois; and, what is still more, to have found it invariably correct for the last 140 years. Of the year 1806, it is said—Let people procure a supply of oats and commodities, for at the end of August commences a great war, which extends to many regions. The people suffer death and great calamities. In 1807, a great quantity of snow will fall in the beginning of February —many inundations. The most important prophecy relates to the year 1811—it will be difficult to preserve the cattle through the severity of winter; from that year a peace of a whole century will be enjoyed by Christendom: bread, wine and clothing will then be cheap. [London paper.]
