These gentlemen are the same with those previously appointed, with the exception of Commodore Preble, whose long illness and consequent death prevented the court from setting at an earlier period.

FEDERAL GAZETTE.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 24.

The brig Hercules, Weeks, from Bordeaux for New-York, laden with brandy, wine and dry goods, foundered at sea in the gale of the 29th of August, in lat. 40, 32, long. 66, 80, out 40 days. The mate and 5 of the crew were lost. Captain W. and 3 of his crew were eight days on the wreck, when they were taken off the 5th Sept. by capt. Whaley, of the brig Rover, from Liverpool and arrived at New-Castle, Mass.

A Quebec paper of September 4, observes, "That the whole of the Indian nations have offered their services to the British government in case of a war with the United States."

The house of W. Lees, Liverpool, has stopped payment. Several Americans are likely to be great sufferers.

Annapolis, September 21.

This day Stevenson Archer, Esq. son of the Hon. Dr. Archer, of Harford, was admitted as an attorney at the bar of Anne-Arundel county court.

Extract of a letter from St. Thomas, received at New-York, dated 24th August.

Our market for provisions has been dull for some time, owing to an embargo being laid on those articles by the government; but as the alarm about an embargo in America seems to have subsided, they have concluded to permit the exportation of those articles again. We are in hopes it will make business brisk again in a few days.

In looking over Aikin's Athenaeum, for the month of August, we were struck with the following interesting paragraph:

"The committee of the house of commons, appointed to inquire into the state of the West-India trade, is expected soon to make its report. Rumor states that very positive evidence has been given, by many of our principal merchants relative to the expediency, or as it is termed the necessity of interrupting the trade carried on by the Americans with the French and Spanish Islands. As this matter is likely to come very soon before parliament, where it will probably lead to animated discussions, we shall briefly explain to our readers the merits of both sides of the question.

The French colonies were formerly obliged, in the same way as ours, to send the whole of their produce to the mother country. The law by which this necessity is enforced in Britain, is commonly, but not with strict propriety, called our navigation law. The fact is, that independent of the general provisions of the navigation law, we have for a hundred and fifty years specific acts of parliament in the same spirit, and more comprehensive in their operation, in regard to the colonies, than the celebrated navigation laws of Cromwell. Be this as it may, the French colonies have sent home their produce to the mother country exclusively, for more than a century. In war this was a matter of no small difficulty, but as there was no other means of disposing of it, the only alternative was to let it remain in the colonies or hazard the conveyance. In the present war, however, Talleyrand discovered that America was a very convenient medium for carrying on this commerce, and accordingly a month had scarcely elapsed, after the renewal of hostilities in 1806, when Bonaparte issued a decree opening the French colonies to the Americans. This trade has since been carried on to an amazing extent, and almost the whole continent of Europe is by these means supplied with West-India produce. No treaty could have been more advantageous for both parties. America produces in plenty the provisions and lumber, which are wanted in the West-Indies. The West-Indies pay her with sugar, rum, coffee and other articles of tropical growth, which do not interfere with her own productions, and which are equally useful for her own consumption, and for traffic with other countries. Such a liberal export does she make of West-India produce, that in the year 1803 no fewer than 211 American ships entered the port of Amsterdam, importing 45,000 hogshead of sugar. In consequence of the cheapness of conveyance by neutrals, and of the obstacles thrown in the way of our commerce by Bonaparte's prohibitory decrees, there is no demand whatever on the continent for British produce, except on terms at which it is ruinous to sell. Matters have been going on at this rate above two years, but they are now come to a state at which the merchants consider it incumbent on them to exert all their influence to induce ministry to put a stop to the American intercourse with the enemy's colonies. A measure of this nature was no doubt in contemplation by Mr. Pitt, in 1805; but his successors viewed the matter in a very different light. Their sentiments on this head, were stated at length in the inquiry into the state of the nation, published in March last year. At that period, however, it is to be remarked, that the intercourse in question had not yet done so much mischief; nor had Bonaparte then attempted to exclude us so completely from the continent.

"The only objection to intercourse is the dread of a war with America, or rather of the mere suspension of a trade which takes off a yearly value of between eight and nine millions of our manufactures. Any interruption of so important a traffick should certainly, if possible be avoided; and no prospect of aggrandisement to ourselves, or of injury to our enemies would justify a measure calculated to produce a rupture of this kind. But if the prosperity of our commerce and our shipping be at stake, the case is widely different. The hostile act would obviously be directed against France, not against America, to whom we have no antipathy. In carrying it into effect, as far as regards America, we should be solicitous to avoid an offensive or pernicious conduct; and with these precautions (which by the bye our government have seldom been very skilful in observing) it is probable that no quarrel with America would ensue, for although our loss in such a contest would not be small, the loss of America would be ten times greater."
