to Coles's creek. Q. What was the total amount of the party? A. There were about 130 at Coles's creek. Q. Was there any application to you to join them? A. Mr. Blannerhassett applied to me. Q. In what manner? A. He asked me to go along with him; but I said I did n t wish to go without knowing where they were going. He was at me two or three times. He said that many men were going without knowing any m re than I did. I told him I had very little in the world, but that I did not wish to leave it in that way.

Mr. Burr here interrupted the examination. He observed that the counsel for the prosecution were b und to prove the overt act first; that there was no impropriety in producing circumstances explanatory of the overt act; but how could these conversations between other persons, and held in his absence contribute to establish this act, or how could they affect him; Mr. Hay contended that these circumsiances night contribute to show the intentions of the party and the character of the enterprize. The Chief Justice considered this as admissible testimony. If the counsel for the prosecution charge a military assemblage at the mouth of Cumberland, they were at liberty to produce every circumstance explanatory of the nature of that assemblage. He considered conversations among the men themselves at the mouth of Cumberland, as admissable, because they contributed to show the nature of the expedition; and why should not conversations that were afterwards held be as explanatory as those which were there maintained ? The charge too, was not confined to the mouth of that river, but was extended to any place below that, which was in the limits of the United States. It is then immaterial where these conversations passed, because they make a part of the transactions at the places actually charged. Mr. Botts objected that these c nversations were not held within the United States, because the jurisdiction of Mississippi had never extended beyond the margin of the Mississippi. Some conversation here ensued, when Mr. McDowell was dismissed, and William Love (the quondam groom of Blannerhassett) was called into court .-

DUBLIN, July 27.

" On Saturday night the garrison of Dublin was under arms, large patroles sent out, and every precantion taken that the apprehensions of public disturbance upon a lar te scale, might be supposed to suggest. The garrison had been lately weakened by the embarkation of two regiments of the line for England (the 7th and 8th,) and, with the exception of the 5th garrison battalion, was composed of militia regiments, at the time of the expected riot. However, the whole force, inadequate as it was to continue the heavy details of duty that the garrison requires, were ready for any exertions circumstances might render necessary. The serjeant posted at Harold's Cross (the prine pal entrance to the city, and the road from the counties of Wicklow and Wexford,) reported that during the day he had remarked a considerable number, to the amount of upwards of a thousand, of country looking who had passed the post on their way to the city; and several other persons whose vigilant eye detected those appearances, which if they had been credited might have prevented the misfortunes of the 23d July, 1803, communicated their suspicions to government, that s me mischief was impending. The discretion of not mentioning names is too obvious to be appologized for. However, the night passed over without any circumstance occurring in the smallest degree to countenance the reports that were made. Government without altering the mild tenor of its conduct, is prepared to use a strong hand.

FEDERAL GAZETTE.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 1.

INTERESTING LETTER From Mr. Merry, late minister from the court of Great-Britain to the United States received at New-York.

Clarges street, (London) Aug. 11, 1807. I have been favored with your letter, to which I have deferred replying, in the dally expectation, that some official accounts from America would have enabled his majesty's government to have determined upon the line of conduct that it may ultimately appear expedient to pursue in the critical state of our relations with that country.

For a definition of the manner in which the question stands at this moment, and remain until official information be received respecting the pretensions of the American government towards an adjustment of the complaint on their part, occasioned by the affair between his majesty's ship Leopard, and the Chesapeake frigate, I cannot do better than refer you to the explanation given last night by Mr. Canning, in the house of commons. To that statement, however, it may be satisfactory I should add, that, as government have, in their explanations with the American minister here, disavowed the principle upon which admiral Berkley has acted, and recalled him in consequence of the orders he issued, there is great room to hope that this affair will be settled in an amicable manner.

A comet was discovered on Saturday evening last, and has since been observed by many of the inhabitants of this city. It is visible to the naked eye. About seven o'clock yesterday evening it was observed in a direction nearly west. From its slow progress, there is a probability of its remaining visible for several ensuing evenings.

[Phil. pap]

Communication. MR. HEWES, On looking over your paper of yesterday, wards? A. It was increased before we got! I was very agreeably surprised at seeing the to Coles's creek. O. What was the total name of the venerable Jesse Hollingsworth announced, with an assurance that he would serve this city in the next general assembly, if elected. Had I no other inducement to give him my suffrage than the known integrity and uprightness of his heart, added to his correct knowledge of the interest of the state, and local interest of Baltimore in particular, he should have it most willingly -But when I remember the man, who at the risque of his life and fortune, saved many poor American prisoners from starving in the prisons of Philadelphia, during the revolutionary war, by supplying them with bread, I should consider myself as wanting the most noble feelings of a free man, if I did not give him my vote and interest.
