Mr. Webster.
It appears by a publication in the Federal Gazette of the 13th inst. signed W. H. Webster, that some remarks on this gentleman's manner of signing and acting has given him deep offence. While Beatrice, to whom his observations are directed, thinks that waiston criticism should never be indulged, she must consider herself entitled to the right of exercising her judgment freely on every object heretofore acknowledged within the pale of criticism. Among these are the artistic performances and performers. If Mr. Webster has suffered from unjust criticism, he will necessarily rise above it; if, on the other hand, judges and men of taste have formed the same opinion as Miss Beatrice, her advice to him is that he should endeavor to improve by it, instead of wasting his time in abusing a lady.

There is another right which Beatrice claims, that of conducting the Observer upon principles of the most perfect independence, if she has ventur'd upon a difficult and arduous task, her friends know how to appreciate her reasons for undertaking it, but in the most extreme and unqualified terms she declares, that no person, friend or enemy, has she ever yet saluted, personally or by letter to become a subscriber. The public will therefore judge of her surprise to find it asserted by Mr. Webster that he had received a letter from her, dated the 2d of October in which she says she proposed to prostrate to his use the pages of the Observer for five dollars. Mr. Webster regrets that he has lost the letter which, contains this proposal, and suggests if there are those who doubt his veracity, that he will "make effort." Beatrice regrets also that so misgiving an application should not have been thought worth preserving; and that the curiamust depend for a knowledge of its contents upon Mr. Webster's recollection of its particulars, and the dating upon his affidavit. This neglect too is the more extraordinary, as Miss Beatrice, in the Observer of the 20th of June last, speaking of his performance at Mr.
Neminger's concert, says "that it really is to be desired that he would not distort his features with the horrible grimaces he makes whilst singing—and that in his trills he would not assume the appearance of gagging his throat with his notes, nor make his transitions so sudden and unequal." We have observed him on the stage as well as in the present instance, and in viewing the contortions of his body and the contraction of his muscles (when he would astonish the natives by the wonder of his skill) our imagination has always presented us the agreeable idea of a man laboring under the operation of asthma Botic.
That the known and acknowledged writer of these remarks should offer to become the champion of the gentleman who was the object, is so original a circumstance that it is really a matter of surprise Mr. Webster should have been so careless, in preserving its proof. The world will judge how far an affidavit could establish its authenticity.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FED. GAZ.
SIB,
In my publication of the 13th instant, I stated the substance of a letter which I had received from Beatrice Ironside, offering me the pages of the Observer, which would allow all over the continent, for five dollars. I have seen a contradiction of my assertion in your paper of last night; but as it is anonymous I shall certainly not in the slightest reply to it. I have opened enemies enough, without encountering a hidden one, and I thought that one so delicate

When every calamity, and an habitual passion of tearing every species of merit that presumes to move out of the common and ordinary track, at once combine to blast the reputation and professional character of any individual, it becomes the duty of every honest man to endeavor to stem that torrent of oppression to which, sooner or later, if he once becomes the object of public notice, he

of candor and honorable ingenuisness which I have, and I hope ever will, characterize the American people. How fit he has been described in his expectations, by the delicate and immaculate Translator of Charles D'Alebe, Your's,

TO A CANDID & GENEROUS PUBL. C.
When every calamity, and an habitual pas-
dinary track, at once combine to blast the re-
any individual, it becomes the duty of every
once becomes the object of public notice, he may be himself exposed. I allude to Mr.
Webster, "a stranger in a strange land," induced to come among you from that reputation of candor and honorable ingenuisness which
