And not two blanks to a prize. The scheme actually sold to a company of gentlemen in New-York, to whom the managers have obligated themselves to commence the drawing on THURSDAY, the 31st day of December next.

To draw 500 tickets per day, and four days

BALTIMORE.

From the rapid sale of the Tickets in every part of the union, an advance will shortly be put on them, of which an advertisement will soon appear in the public prints.
The grandeur of the scheme of the above lottery, together with an assurance from the managers that the lottery will positively commence drawing on the 31st day of December next, have been a sufficient inducement for the subscribers to come to the city of Baltimore for the express purpose of facilitating the sale of the Tickets.
One of the above firm will personally attend the drawing daily, to take down the numbers correctly, as will also one of their clerks. All prizes sold by G. & R. Waite will be paid by them, and a printed list of all prizes drawn will be published by them and delivered to their customers once a fortnight during the COMMUNICATION.

TO ALL HONEST MEN.
FELLOW-CITIZENS—It can no longer be questioned, that there exists a spirit of turbulence in this city, which is highly disgraceful and exceedingly alarming. The riotous and improper assemblages of the last week, speak a language which cannot be misunderstood by any sober or reflecting man. The interests of society and the su-premacny of the laws, have been so pointedly attacked, that no honest man, or man of property, can any longer feel his person or his possessions safe. Disorderly assemblages in other countries have generally been excited by some local circumstance, such as the presence of some individual highly offensive to the populace, or by the supposed persecution of some popular person, or by famine, believed to be artificial, or brought on by the hateful practice of forestalling, or by something particularly calculated to operate on the passions of the multitude.
But the present case is totally different in its nature: here, there was a cool, premeditated and gross insult offered to the head of the judiciary of our country, by associating his efficacy with those of persons, who (guilty or innocent) the organizers of the rout viewed as traitors and culprits, thereby bringing into contempt, as far as their feeble exertions could effect it, the guardian of our rights and liberties, and with him the whole judiciary of our country.
The chief justice, after a patient and laborious attention to a trial, protracted by the abundance of evidence, and by other circumstances to an unusual length, has decided that in his opinion the person charged cannot be legally condemned in the state in which the act of treason was first said to have been committed, and this opinion, with all the arguments by which it has been supported, has been given to the public, in a very able, logical and learned manner; and of this elaborate, profound and scientific opinion on points of law, a few ignorant, wicked and designing men, who are never heard of or noticed, except on the turbid waves of popular commotion, have undertaken to judge. To speak of these persons having an opinion in the case, would be an insult on common sense. But what information is there in our possession, on which any sensible man would decide that Aaron Burr ought to have been condemned for treason, committed in the state of VIRGINIA.
What honest man or what man who loves his country, or who has any regard for his liberty or his life, would have wished the chief justice, even admitting him to have been fully convinced of Burr's guilt, to have condemned him when it could not be legally done. If he had dared to wrest the law from its course in this instance, what man would feel at ease, when although our laws should be just and mild, we should have a judge who would not make them the rule of his conduct, but would judge us according to his own convictions, impressions, wishes or whims.
I congratulate my countrymen and myself, that we have a chief justice who is not afraid to perform his duty, even when it is in opposition to the preconceived or crude notions of the public; or when such performance of duty might expose him to malignant insinuations from a source, from which it is indecorous and irregular, that the slightest intimation of the kind should have issued. I rejoice also that we have a judge in our city, who has seen clearly the tendency, and has acted with energy, with respect to the recent outrages, without regard to the threats of concealed slanderers and assassins. I am sure he feels himself strong in the countenance and support of every honest man in the community, and I confidently hope that he will punish the guilty in an exemplary manner.
No man more sincerely deprecates the necessity of harsh measures than I do, but it must be obvious to every person who thinks of it, that lenity and toleration on the present occasion would be unpardonable cruelty.
It has been urged by some well meaning men, that if suffered to proceed without interruption, the thing would blow over in a short time, and we should hear nothing more of it. This calculation is exceedingly shallow and false. That line of conduct and mode of speaking may be correct, where a slight commotion has been excited by some cause of irritation which is local in its nature, and which may never operate again. But the present fermentation has been instituted and encouraged with views the most detestable and sinister. The men at the bottom of this business, wish to ascertain to what extent the people of Baltimore will tolerate the licen-tiousness of a mob, and if the men of virtue in our city are not active, alert and vigorous in their efforts to strangle and subdue this more than hydra-headed monster, they will soon have to bid adieu to their quietness and security, which they have so long enjoyed.
Exemption from immediate punishment on Tuesday night, gave encouragement for a repetition of the outrage and the infraction of the peace on Saturday night; in these two we have precedents for a third; others will follow, at first as a thing of general usage, and afterwards as a thing of right.
Shall we then reasonably expect a judge to be firm and inflexible in the performance of his duty, when, if he does not procure the condemnation of every individual against whom there is a current of popular prejudice, whether well or ill founded, or if he punishes any offender, however notorious, if he has numerous accomplices, associates or friends, he is liable to be burnt in effigy forthwith, to be threatened with the barbarous discipline of tarring and feathering, to have his house besieged and annoyed by the vile and profligate rabble of a whole city? which, besides disturbing and destroying that domestic tranquility, to which every good citizen is entitled, in every country where there is any government, compels him to collect his friends about him, to arm them, to be ready to resist, forcibly force; thereby throwing us into the practices of the remote and uncivilized ages, which is saying, in plain language, we have no laws; or, what is tantamount, our laws have not strength enough to protect us.

If severe punishment is not inflicted on the factious and evil minded men who have planned and organized the recent commotions, it is possible that a certain individual now high in office and in popular favor, may by popular caprice, be hurried from his eminence, impeached and brought before a court, and whether he can be legally convicted or not, our mob-governed judges may be afraid to decide impartially. This may be the condition of any man of conspicuous talents.
SILVER.

THE ANSWER.

GENTLEMEN,
You embarrass and oppress me by this unexpected and unmerited courtesy.
Feeling and reflection instruct me to reverence your motives, and I shall ever acknowledge your approbation with grateful sensitivity; but as the instance of my conduct which has produced the expression of your confidence, was imposed on me by imperious circumstances and sprung from a sense of duty, which I could not have neglected without incurring the reprobation of my own breast, and the condemnation of all good men, it necessarily follows that I can have no fair claim to extraordinary favor.

Yet pending the awful scenes to which you have adverted, the sufferings incident to the peculiarity of my situation, seem to give me some title to the sympathy of those for whom I have suffered; and I beg you to believe that in the commendation of the patriot band of citizen soldiers, who have honored me on this occasion, I have received a testimonial which I most highly appreciate.

When I offered myself a sacrifice to avert a great national calamity, I was not insensible that I exposed myself to serious peril, but indeed I did anticipate the perils of military conflict, and not the persecutions of the tongue and the pen. I have been deceived, and instead of the sword of the soldier, I have been assailed by the dagger of the assassin.
The gathering storm surveyed at a distance, which menaced those fundamental institutions I had sworn to defend, did not alarm me for myself, but put me in fear for my country—yielded to a virtuous impulse struck for the safety of the state, and in-giving the blow I offended against the laws—encompassed by difficulties, without guide or pilot but my own feeble discretion, and urged by the necessity of the case, I was impelled by my solicitudes to the commission of a momentary violation, for the permanent security of the constitution, and in discharging a sacred duty, I have incurred heavy penalties—should the policy of my country prescribe it, I shall meet the infliction without a murmur, and prostrating myself before the civil authority, I shall triumph in my own degradation; or should it be deemed expedient to the safety and happiness of United America to abolish the precedent, let the honest purposes of a faithful soldier be fulfilled and my life obliterate the transgression;—then I shall not have lived in vain, and posterity whilst they applaud the generous sentiment which has moved you, gentlemen, this day, will do justice to the memory of a voluntary victim, whose expiring breath will be raised to heaven for the preservation of HIS COUNTRY, ITS GOVERNMENT AND LAWS.

NEW-YORK, November 7.
Cleared, skip Dryade, Barker, Charleston; Liverpool Packet, Parsons, Savannah; brig Aurora, Lambert, Havana; ship Safety, New York.
SILVER.

The following address was on Sunday presented to Gen. JAMES WILKINSON, by the Officers of the 27th Reg. Maryland Militia.

Sir,
The institutions of a free people, are most peculiarly exposed to subversion, from the tenderness of the law, in refusing to impose restraints on the actions of individuals, who are thus permitted at leisure to digest and mature schemes of ambition, and projects of revolution, of which the law takes no cognizance, until they may fatally explode upon the community. To the lovers of order and good government, it must be a subject of surprize and regret that ever an occasion should occur, when the law, which self-balanced and omnipotent, should equally protect society and the individual, having failed in its operation upon a great emergency, the fate of a portion of our country should be cast on the exertions and will of a single person; but when such a crisis existed, it must be a source of congratulation to every good citizen, that such a man with the requisite energy and patriotism, should be found at his post—Far distant from those to whom you looked for instructions, and by whose orders you were bound, embarrassed by difficulties, perplexed by artifices, and beset by toils, you resisted the prospect of ambition, the wiles of intrigue, and the arts of a master in cunning and corruption, and consulting the inspiration of patriotism, & the dictates of duty, you dared, at your own diread risk, and upon your sole responsibility, to defeat the foul projects of treason and save a people from the horrors of revolutionary rapine and violence. For this great and important service, you have merited the thanks of a grateful nation—and the impartial pen of history shall transmit your name unsullied by the false glosses & artful calumnies of the day, to a posterity who will revere your memory, as one who has deserved a veil of his native land, and is to be ranked among its benefactors. For our part, we take this occasion to assure you, that the attempts which have been made under the auspices of treason, to depreciate your services and distort your motives, have only served to render the merit of those services more precious, the patriotism and purity of those motives more indisputable.

That your country may continue to enjoy the fruits of your useful labors, that your services, and merits may never be forgotten, while honorable actions receive their reward, and that you may long live to feel the approbation of your country, and of your conscience, is the ardent and affectionate wish of those, who are happy to have this public occasion of expressing to you, sir, their attachment to your person, and of welcoming you to the city of Baltimore.
