Fifty Dollars Reward.

Ran-away from the subscriber on 26th December last, a Mulatto Man named TONEY, a blacksmith by trade: he is about 24 years of age, 5 feet 10 inches high—had on when he went away a dark cloth surtout coat and pantaloons—his right foot has been broken, which causes him to limp, and is much larger than the other. He travelled in the stage from Edenton to Suffolk, the 28th ult. I have understood he went by the name of Benjamin James while in Suffolk—I expect he will endeavor to pass as a free man. The above reward will be given to any person who will secure him in any jail so that I get him again, and all reasonable charges paid if delivered to me in Plymouth, North-Carolina.

PROPOSALS

BY SAMUEL JEFFERIS, Baltimore,

For publishing by subscription, a new edition of DEAN'S Analytical Guide to the Art of Penmanship;

Revised, improved and enlarged. By HENRY DEAN, professor of Penmanship, author of the Penman's Assistant, Printer's Academical Companion, Introduction to the Art of Writing, &c.

——"Populumque falsis Dedocet uti literis." HOR.

Extract from the Monthly Anthology and Boston Review for August 1, 1807.

A long attention devoted to successful practice and instruction of Penmanship, confer on him an undoubted right to be heard on this subject.

We cannot but think this work possesses higher claims to public attention, than any hitherto published in our country on the subject; as, added to the author's own experience, he confesses to have availed himself of the most splendid works published, with a view of illustrating the "diplomatic art." The rules of distance and proportion are as concise as the nature of the alphabet admits, and are exemplified by specimens handsomely and accurately engraved. Mr Dean has also rendered his work valuable by much curious historical information of the origin and progress of writing & printing, and of the several claims of the ancients to the invention of these valuable arts. The work is written in an agreeable style, & is worth the perusal of those whose long habits of scrawling render a recurrence to the first principles of penmanship tedious, if not impossible.

Extract from the Port Folio, published at Philadelphia, November 21st, 1807.

This work, where the author avails himself of the labours of Astle and others, is compiled udiciously and where he trusts to his own genius, is laboured successfully. His work, which deserves extensive patronage, is a valuable guide to the acquirement of an art useful and ornamental. The engravings are well executed: Those designs by Miss Payne, a young lady of Boston, are eminently ingenious and beautiful. The author's theory is subtle and scientific. Parts of it, however, appear to be calculated rather for proficients than pupils; but the practical portion of this work we think well calculated for the improvement of the Tyro. The number of literary and mercantile subscribers to this ingenious quarto, is no defective proof of the rank which the author holds in the opinion of his judges, and we understand that the system is sufficiently popular.

This work will consist of three parts.

1. An historical account of the origin and progress of letters, their progressive improvement, their present state, and the principles upon which they were originally constructed; the introduction, progress, and present state of writing in England and the United States of America; the origian and use of stenography or short hand writing; the materials for writing upon, and the instruments used in the different ages.

2 The art of Penmanship, its various improvements, its present state and its principles exemplified by a variety of useful and ornamented engravings, exhibiting letters and sections of letters which form the basis and finish the construction of a complete system of practical penmanship. The examples are correctly executed, and in progressive order for the learner to pursue; accompanied by plain and familiar directions. The system being founded upon practical experience, the art is made attainable in much less time, and greater perfection, than by any other method in present use The principles are so simplified and certain in their effect, that any who are desirous to write a regular and correct hand, may, by the help of this guide alone, without the assistance of a master, obtain that object in any one hand, or all the variety of hands.

3 An account of the origin and progress of printing, explaining the true method of forming letters by scale, to any dimensions, with geometrical problems, illustrated by examples beautifully ornamented.

CONDITIONS.

1st. This edition will be considerably enlarged, an elegant frontispiece and a number of plates added; it will be comprised in a handsome quarto volume, printed equal to hot-pressed wort, on a type entirely new and on fine vellum paper.

2d. The work will be delivered to subscribers in boards at three dollars: their names will be printed in the volume Those who subscribe for six copies, or procure that number of subscribers, and account for them, shall be entitled to a seventh copy gratis.

3d. In some of the plates added to the addition will be presented a variety of specimens, engraved from the hand writing of his present pupils, containing the most modern approved forms used in business. The principles of Milns, Butterworth Langfor', and the most celebrated masters of the art, will be correctly exhibited, and the recent improvements, in adapting these principles to a course of succesful practice clearly elucidated.

The subscription will be closed on the 1st of 4th month (April) next when those who are entrusted with subscription papers are requested to return them to the publishers.

TO THE PUBLIC.

The art of writing is of such remote antiquity, so obviously useful, and its beauties, when gracefully exhibited, so universally admired that it seems almost unnecessary to employ arguments to establish its claim to the particular attention of an enlightened public.

No one denies its importance in the busy spheres of life, and so intimately is it connected with the attainment of polite and useful knowledge, that wherever science is cultivated it is necessarily considered an essential introductory acquisit on. Not only professional men and men of busines are dependent on this necessary art, but all ranks and conditions of society, even those who have not enjoyed the opportunities of acquiring it themselves, are materially benefited by its general effect

It is therefore no longer a subject of enquiry and speculation whether the art of penmanship be desirable attainment, whether it be worth labour and expence necessary for acquiring it, or how we may, at any rate, avail ourselves of its benefits. But the question now is, how may it be attained with the least expence of time, and in that perfection which exhibits it to the best advantage?

The author had observed, with regret, that this indispensable branch of education was much neglected, few persons acquiring it in a degree of perfection proportioned to the rank which it ought to hold in the circle of elegant and polite accomplishments This neglect has probably been owing to the labour and length of time usuall required for this purpose, under the common loose and unsystematic modes of instruction. Nor can he, with all his undissembled fondness for his favorite pursuit, refuse to applaud the good sense of those who are unwilling to devote whole years, of our short life, to an art in which he confesses that no more than a very moderate portion of skill is absolutely necessary for our ordinary occasions

This work is offered to the public with a view of introducing a new method of instructing, calculated not only to lessen the labour, but to abridge the period of time usually spent in learning the art of penmanship. He has endeavored to ascertain, with precision, the true principles of art, and to the candid and intelligent, he ventures the assertion, that the practical effect of his improvements has been verified and confirmed by the actual experience of himself and others. There is no hesitation in saying, that the system, taken in the whole, is entirely different from any now practised either in this or other countries

He deems it unnecessary, in this place, to enter into the details of the plan. The leading principles are to reduce the letters of the alphabet to as few elements as possible, consistently with their practical application, and to conduct the pupil by regular advances, from the simplest elements to the most complex and refined ornaments of penmanship.

To ascertain and mature this method, the author has for some years past made the art of penmanship almost the sole object of his study, and instead of dividing his attention among the various branches of common school education, devoted his time and industry to that alone.

He introduces the work to the public with no other recommendations than its intrinsic merit, by which alone it must stand or fall, and recommends it not as a speculative theory, but as a completely matured system, adequate to the purpose for which it was intended, and successfully demonstrated by experiment — He submits it to the nicest criticism, which is ever the most candid.

HENRY DEAN.

The Subscriber hereby gives

Notice, that he intends to make application to Talbot county court, at the next term thereof, to be held on the fourth Monday in May next, or to some one of the judges of the said court, after two months from this date, for the benefit of an act of assembly, passed at November session, 1805, entitled "An act, for the relief of sundry insolvent debtors," and of the supplement thereto. The subsbriber, having already transferred to a Trustee, all his property, for the benefit of his creditors, avows the sole object of his intended application to be the relief of his person from arrest or executions, until his said Trustee shall be able to dispose of the residue of the said property and pay his remaining debts.
