APOLLO'S FOUNT.

THE BACHELOR'S DREAM.

The music ceased, the last quadrille was o'er,
And one by one the waning beauties fled;
The garlands vanished from the fresco'd floor,
The nodding fiddler hung his weary head.

And I—a melancholy single man—
Retired to mourn my solitary fate,
I slept awhile; but o'er my slumbers ran
The sylph-like image of my blushing Kate.

I dreamt of mutual love and Hymen's joys,
Of happy moments and connubial blisses;
And then I thought of little girls and boys,
The mother's glances and the infants' kisses.

I saw them all, in sweet perspective sitting,
In winter's eve around the blazing fire;
The children playing, and the mother knitting,
Or fondly gazing on the happy sire.

The scene was chang'd—in came the baker's bill,
I stared to see the hideous consummation
Of cakes and biscuits, that it took to fill
The bellies of the rising generation.

There was no end to eating—loads of mutton
Were vanquished daily by this little host;
To see them, you'd have tho't each tiny glutton
Had laid a wager who could eat the most.

The massy pudding smoked upon the platter,
The pond'rous sirloin reared its head in vain,
The little urchins kicked up such a clatter,
That scarce a remnant e'er appeared again.

Then came the school bill, board and education
So much per quarter; but the extras 'mounted
To nearly twice the primal stipulation,
And every little bagatelle was counted.

To washing shirts—A new Homeri Ilias—
A pane of glass—Repairing coat & breeches—
A slate and pencil—Binding of Virgilius—
Drawing a tooth—An opening draught and leeches.

And now I languished for the single state,
The social glass, the horse & chaise on Sunday,
A jaunt to Windsor with my sweetheart Kate,
And blam'd again the weekly bills of Monday.

Here Kate began to scold, I stampt and swore,
The kittens squeak, the children loudly scream;
And thus awaking with the wild uproar,
I thank'd my stars that it was but a dream.

OPINIONS OF BONAPARTE.

Characters and anecdotes from Las Case's Journal, just published in London.

THE EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA—His good nature is well known, and makes him constantly the dupe of the designing. His son will be like him.

THE KING OF PRUSSIA—As a private character is an honorable, good and worthy man; but in his political capacity, he is naturally disposed to yield to necessity; he is always commanded by whosoever has power on his side and seems about to strike.

THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA—Is a man superior to either the Emperor of Austria or the King of Prussia. He possesses wit, grace, information, is fascinating, but he is not to be trusted; he is devoid of candor, he is cunning, false and expert—he can go a great length. If I die here, he will be my real heir in Europe.

THE EMPRESS OF AUSTRIA.—She has address and ability, and that sufficient to embarrass her husband, who had acquired a conviction that she entertained a poor opinion of him. Her countenance was agreeable, engaging, and had something very peculiar in it; she was a pretty little nun.

BONAPARTE'S OPINION OF HIS GENERALS.

"I know the depth, or what I call the draught of water of all my Generals." "Some," added he, joining actions to his words, "will sink to the waist, some to the chin, others over the head; but the number of the latter is very small."

JUNOT.—During the erection of one of the first batteries which Napoleon, on his arrival at Toulon, directed against the English, he asked whether there was a Serjeant or Corporal present who could write? A man advanced from the ranks, and wrote to his dictation on the epaulment. The note was scarcely ended, when a cannon ball, which had been fired in the direction of the battery, fell near the spot, and the paper was immediately covered by the loose earth thrown up by the ball. 'Well,' said the writer, 'I shall have no need of sand.' This remark, together with the coolness with which it was made, fixed the attention of Napoleon, and made the fortune of the serjeant.—This man was Junot, afterwards Duke of Abrantes.

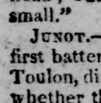

DUROC—Had lively, tender, and concealed passions, little corresponding with the coldness of his manner. Chance or some accident could alone have made me acquainted with Duroc's character. He was a pure and virtuous man, utterly disinterested, and extremely generous. He was one of those persons whose value is never known till they are lost.

KLEBER—Was endowed with the highest talent, but he was merely the man of the moment; he pursued glory as the only road to happiness; but he had no national sentiment, and he could without any sacrifice have devoted himself to foreign service.

LANNES—Had become a very able commander at the period of his death. 'I found him a dwarf,' said the Emperor, 'but I lost him a giant.'

MOREAU—Scarcely deserved to be placed in the first rank of Generals; in him nature had left her work unfinished; he possessed more instinct than genius.
