APOLLO'S FOUNT.

The following is a selection from PINCKNEY'S Poems, recently published. "If he who reads it is a lover already (says the North American Review) it will make him love the more, and if he is not, he will determine to become one forthwith. There is a devotion and delicacy about it, an ardent, and at the same time respectful and spiritual passion breathed out in it, which must insure for it a ready admiration."

A HEALTH.

I fill this cup to one made up
  Of loveliness alone,
A woman, of her gentle sex
  The seeming paragon;
To whom the better elements
  And kindly stars have given
A form so fair, that, like the air,
  'Tis less of earth than heaven.

Her every tone is music's own,
  Like those of morning birds,
And something more than melody
  Dwells ever in her words:
The coinage of her heart are they,
  And from her lips each flow,
As one may see the burthened bee
  Forth issue from the rose.

Affections are as thoughts to her,
  The measure of her hours;
Her feelings have the fragrancy,
  The freshness of young flowers;
And lovely passions, changing oft,
  So fill her, she appears
The image of themselves by turns,
  —The idol of past years!

Of her bright face one glance will trace
  A picture on the brain,
And of her voice in echoing hearts
  A sound must long remain;
But memory such as mine of her
  So very much endears,
When death is nigh, my latest sigh
  Will not be life's but her's.

I filled this cup to one made up
  Of loveliness alone,
A woman, of her gentle sex
  The seeming paragon—
Her health! and would on earth there stood
  Some more of such a frame,
That life might be all poetry,
  And weariness a name.

A DEFENCE OF OLD BACHELORS.

GENTLEMEN:—Although I cannot plead the excuse of Old Silky that "I must take care of my family;" yet engagements of another sort leave me very little leisure to undertake the Defence of that persecuted and degraded of all Castes, Old Bachelors. The finger of Scorn is pointed at us in almost all directions. The laws of Augustus were levelled at us. The ordinances of Spain mulcted us with the heaviest penalties. Nor are modern manners more favorable. Virgins are taught almost to shrink from our approach. The shrewdest Philisopher of the age has contemptuously compared us to a useless single blade of a pair of scissors. We are toasted and roasted at Public Dinners. We have reasons to complain of our persecution; and almost to exclaim in the words of Shylock: "Hath not an Old Bachelor eyes? Hath not an Old Bachelor hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt by the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, heated by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Married Man is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? if you tickle us, do we not laugh? if you poison us, do we not die."

I will not say that our enemies remind me of the Fox in the well, who have persuaded so many silly Goats to be in their company. I will not urge how ungenerous it might be to brand those with infamy, who warned by their example have had discretion enough to avoid the pit into which they have fallen. I will have recourse to no such argument; no such retort. It does not comport with our principles to undervalue the condition of double-blessedness which we are not destined to enjoy or to endure: but I proceed to make our own defence and urge our own palliation.

First, then is it right to reproach us all for the errors of a few? Because some persons have set their faces against wedlock from their earliest years, is it fit to visit their sins upon our heads? Some of us were prevented by hard necessity from wooing the hearts of our fair country-women. Is that a sin, which is never to be forgiven? Some of us were unfortunate in our attachments: we wooed the blessing which we could not win; we attempted all in our power to wipe off this reproach from our condition; is our misfortune to be converted into a fault?—Either then reserve all your censures for the professed, unrelenting woman-haters, or hurl them with more discrimination and with more justice.

And after all, what are the gross sins of which we are guilty? We are charged with contempt for the softer sex; with insensibility to their attractions; with sordid selfishness; and with utter uselessness in society. We appeal to the party said to be injured: we appeal to the ladies themselves, for an extenuation of damages, if not for our vindication. If Bachelors feel all this contempt for Ladies, why is it, I ask, that we daily see them so attentive to them, while their hardy Husbands appear to be of all men the least concerned about them. Who hands them to their carriages? The Old Bachelors.—Who waits upon them at places of public amusement? The Old Bachelors. Who holds their fans, sups with them, sympathizes with all their little distresses, caresses their children, administers the balm of consolation even to their agonized spirits, but the despised Old Bachelors? There is no office of courtesy or of kindness, which the Bachelor is not ready to fly to perform, and still they are charged with contempt for the ladies. For my own part, Sirs, Old Bachelor as I am, with the snows of more than fifty winters over my head, my attractions to the fairest portion of the Creation are yet irresistable. I wait upon them I am delighted, and instructed by their society, and conversation; and I am free to confess, am more indebted to their kindness, than I am to the self-satisfied distant courtesy of their voluntary petty-fogging advocates.

But, are we to show equal injustice in praising every married man, as has been manifested in censuring every old Bachelor? Is every man, who puts his head into the noose therefore to be endowed with the character of sensibility and discretion? Are there not fortunately thousands of exceptions? I ask, who shows most sensibility to the charms of woman, I, who forbear to entice them from their snug fire-sides, from their delightful abodes, because I am conscious of my inability to furnish them with all the comforts to which they have been accustomed; I, who would not, if I could, drag them from their habitual sphere—or, he whose only ambition is to get his prize, and then let her take care of herself? I have even heard of a young gentlemen, who was scarcely married, before his boarding bill was presented to him—it was returned with the frank declaration that he was unable to pay it? How can such benedicts expect to take care of their wives—or what sensibility do they show to the objects of their choice? It may be Love, stark staring mad Love; but we, old Bachelors, are for mixing with our transactions a little prudent consideration for the permanent happiness of those whom we take under our protection.

I wish to know, whether a man must marry in any event, if he be fit for it or not? Whether the anxiety to escape from the ranks of a poor, despised fraternity is to overcome every other consideration?—I dare say, if the truth were known, that some of the Champions of the Worcester Cattle Show retired to their homes in the course of the night, highly animated with the same spirits which had dictated the toast, to witness perhaps the ill consequences of their own Double-Blessedness. I have sometimes observed the boy, who plays a trick upon his fellows, is frequently disposed to attempt his own vindication before he is accused—and such may have been the stratagem of the toast-giver, who endeavored in the same manner to ward off suspicion.

For our parts, we think it no disgrace to look a little beyond the Honey-moon: for, though we too may be delighted by the music of the Piano, and the little ornaments of the dressing-room, which spring from their needles, their pencils and their wax but more especially their amiable manners and cultivated minds, still we are silly enough to believe that something more than all these attractions are necessary to constitute domestic happiness.—We think it best to endure alone the evils which Fortune has assigned to our lot, rather than indulge the precipitate humour of our Worcester friend, and reduce an innocent woman to our own embarrassments. Who then most justly deserves the epithet of "selfish"? Who manifests the strongest attachment to the Ladies?

As to our usefulness in Society, how shall we test it? Are we not as industrious as other men? Do we not earn as much? Are we not as moral? If in one respect we may be impure, are we not infinitely less so than those affected Josephs, who desert the nuptial couch for the arms of the most dissolute of their sex? Those of our brethren in the two-ox-team, who so manifest their superiority to us, are welcome to all the honors which they deserve.—Of our usefulness, I will give you one proof.

Cast your eye to the sabbath schools.—Here you will find Bachelors (and Maids) the principal actors, in training up, free of all expense, the children of their poor and imprudent brethren in the double team; and if you frequently renew these visits, you look about in vain for many of the teachers whom you have been accustomed to see there, but who have now discontinued this most useful and truly glorious of all occupations, because, forsooth, "they have married a wife, and therefore cannot come!" For myself I can say that I have long been engaged in these and various other useful avocations, in which I have spent my time and my money, and frequently injured my health; and believe me, sirs, for I speak the truth, from no one cause, have I so severely felt the loss of dear and efficient fellow-labourers, as from this boastedly useful one of getting married. Still, Bachelor as I am, I do not think a man need cease to be useful to society, simply because he gets married. I think our usefulness may, and ought to extend beyond the circle of a single family.

I think I have sufficiently proved the falsehood of the assertion, that we are "in nothing good"—and I leave it to any man in his senses to say whether it is not better to be "good for nothing in other things," than to render ourselves worse than good for nothing, by enticing from her family, her friends and a comfortable house one who is illy calculated to endure the "stings and arrows of adverse fortune."

I have done, and leave it to my colleagues to supply all my deficiencies. CŒLEBS.

Ladies always delightful, and not the least so in their dress, are apt to deprive themselves of some of their best morning beams by appearing with their hair in papers. To see grapes in paper bags is bad enough: but the rich locks of a lady in papers, the roots of their hair twisted up like a drummer's, and the forehead staring bald instead of being gracefully tendrilled and shadowed!—it is a capital offence—a defiance to the love and admiration of the other sex. We must allow, at the same time, that they are very shy of being seen in this condition, knowing well enough, how much of their strength, like Sampson's, lies in that gifted ornament. We have known a whole parlour of them fluttered off, like a dove-cote, at the sight of a friend coming up the garden.

On and after the 1st of Nov. the price of tickets will be advanced to $50 each; shares and certificates will also be sold at the same rate—Venders and adventurers throughout the Union and elsewhere have an opportunity of procuring tickets and shares and certificates of do at the scheme price or first cost thereof, for an unusual length of time, in the most brilliant lottery every adopted in the United States, on the plan termed new series, and it is not probable that a like opportunity in so grand a scheme will be offered to the public for many years.

All venders and the public generally are respectfully invited to take an interest in this lottery, which the manager trusts they will find well worthy their immediate attention. The scheme will be generally known throughout the United States, and the citizens thereof disposed to adventure have an excellent opportunity offered them of procuring tickets, shares and certificates in this lottery at the scheme price, as well as at the first advance. In consequence of this, and the small number of tickets in the scheme, those who procrastinate their purchase must hereafter censure themselves only if by a little delay they find themselves too late to procure even a single ticket or share, and thus loose forever the unparalleled opportunity of securing independence for life.

Applications personally, or by letter, post paid, enclosing the cash for even a single ticket or share in the above, may be made at either of the Managers' offices, where the cash will as usual be promptly paid for prizes as soon as drawn.

☞ All of which applications will be thankfully received and respectfully as well as duly attended to, by

Your most obedient and very humble servant,
