APOLLO'S FOUNT.

FROM THE NATIONAL INTELLIFENCER.

DEATH OF JEFFERSON AND ADAMS,

BY Z. BARTON STOUT.

'Twas the day of their fullness of fame,
  Resplendent in time's latest story—
They died midst their own country's acclaim;
  Their death-beds enshrouded with glory;
How meet thus, when lives so illustrious were o'er,
  That their requiem was sung by the cannon's lond roar,

And how bless;d, to decend to the tomb,
  Full of well-deserved honors and years!
The name of no diadem'd conqueror shall bloom
  Thus embalm'd with posterity's tears;
But forever, shall Freeman, with gratitude weep
  O'er the turf, where our time-honoured Patriots sleep.

With a dawning auspicious and bright,
  The Day of our Jubilee rose—
But their eyes, which had lingered to witness its light,
  Were not destined to witness its close—
For to them, in their ripeness of glory, 'twas given,
  To be borne on the tide of rejoicing, to Heaven!

The world shall exult in that day,
  When link'd with a Patriot band
Of sages revered, (all but one passed away,)
  They declar'd for the rights of our land.
For their country, embark'd in the perilous strife,
  And pledg'd, in her cause, honor, fortune and life.

Hence, an empire of liberty sprung,
  Whose example enlightens mankind—
Hence, the death knell of bigots and tyrants was rung,
  Who, for ages, had fettered the mind—
Hence, resistless spreads Freedom o'er land and o'er sea;
  And man, in his dignity, dare to be free.

The halls of Philosophy mourn,
  That these men of the age are no more;
The Free of the world all rejoice they were born,
  The march of the mind to restore.
Monticello and Quincy, with Vernon's bless'd shade,
  Are the shrines ever sacred to Liberty made.

They were spar'd through a long lapse of time,
  To witness their country's success;
And from infancy, see her advance to her prime
  Then receive her warm blessing—and bless—
As summoned to join their compatriots above,
  And bear them our gratitude, homage, and love.

Other Jubilee days shall return—
  Other Patriots contend for the prize—
Other hearts with the pure glow of Liberty burn—
  Other Empires of Freedom arise—
Still shall time, while true greatness can hallow a name,
  Add effulgence to ADAMS and JEFFERSON'S FAME!

Richmond, N. Y. July, 1826.

A NEW ENGLAND TALE.

FROM THE RICHMOND COMPILER.

I am a native of New England; and this circumstance will explain to your readers why my communications advert so often to its history, to its people, and to its scenes. It is a land that I love above all lands beside. I love its religion, its laws, its manners and its customs, its science and its arts. I even love it for its ghosts, its witches, and its diablerie. I love its ragged mountains and its green vallies, its hard soil and its wintry tempests.

"And as the child when soaring sounds molest,
Clings close and closer to its mother's breast;
So the wild torrent and the whirldwind's roar,
But bind him to his native mountains more."

In a retired village of New England, where rogues and thieves were unknown, and where locks and bolts to the doors were unused, the following occurrence took place, about the time that the good town of Salem was honored with the special visitation of a race of beings, which took up their residence any where else but in the bosoms of those unfortunate men and women, who were offered up as victims to the reigning superstition and infatuation of the times.

A whole family, with the exception of two young children, left at home and asleep under the care of a hired girl, had been on an evening's visit to a neighbor of the village, and returned about ten o'clock, a late hour for those times of primitive simplicity. On their return they found the servant girl had, for the greatest security doubtless of her tender charge, taken her position close to the side of them, and was sleeping almost as soundly as the best of watchmen in the best regulated cities. It was a clear, moonlight, frosty October evening. After waking up their maid they kindled up the fire, which had been suffered to burn out, and formed a semi-circle round the hearth. Out of doors all was silent, and the deep forests and broken mountains, half revealed by the moonlight, presented a scene of awful grandeur and sublimity, which can be released only by those who have witnessed and felt it. But one circumstance was wanting to complete the most impressive scenery that the country ever exhibits; and that was a mantle of snow.

The little family within were chattering over the events of the evening, when suddenly every voice was hushed, and the same stillness reigned within as without, save the gentle and scarcely audible breathing of the two sleeping innocents, and the sounds which had arrested their attention and almost their breath at the same time. These proceeded from the chamber directly over their heads—the chamber where the two oldest children of the family were accustomed to sleep, and whither they were on the point of retiring to bed. The sounds were inhuman, unearthly. A heavy, irregular tread, as of iron feet; a jarring of the chamber door; broken, labored, hollow, sobbing sounds of voice, if voice it could be called; these united, almost froze the current of blood in the veins of the listeners below. "Father," said the oldest child, "what is it?" This appeal went to the heart of the worthy man. He felt that he must be calm and collected, but his reply showed that he was any thing else. "My child, it is only the wind rattling the door of your chamber." "Her chamber!" said the mother, and took the child in her arms, and drew her chair close to the side of her husband—"There is no wind, father, and I wish that man was out of my chamber."

For a moment all was silent above, and equally silent below. Then the heavy tread was renewed, the jarring of the door re-commenced, and the same inexplicable, sobbing sound or groan was again heard. "What must we do?" said the terrified mother and wife to her husband. The maid gazed in stupid silence on her master, while she seemed to seek for safety by pressing closer to her bosom the second child, whose fear had driven her to take refuge in the arms of one who had often afforded her protection in dangers better understood and more definite, though not half so appalling. "Lucy," said the hesitating man to the maid, "go and call neighbour, Cheever; ask him to come as quick as possible." "I—I don't know the way—I mean, he an't at home—'tis a dreadful cold night—he must be fast asleep—and O! that terrible dog of theirs, I dare not go near the house." "I must then go myself,"—'Hark!' said the wife, 'did you hear that noise?' 'what noise?' 'why something like the feeling of a" Here a longer groan than they had yet heard silenced them all again. The chattering of the maid's teeth was plainly perceptible, and the child in her lap burst out into a loud wailling. The maid was entirely overcome, and sighed and moaned deeply; but the child's mother seemed to be inspired with new courage and fortitude. She took her daughter from the maid, and placed both the children in the arms of their father. 'I will go,' said she 'to Deacon Cheever's and call the good man to advise and aid us; and Lucy, you must go with me.; Lucy beginning to feel that she should be as safe out of the house as in, consented.

As they approached the door, the imprisoned spirit above, for it could be nothing else, seemed striving for enlargement. The tread was more thick, the door shook dreadfully, and the indiscribable groaning was louder than ever. They shrunk back an instant, but they rushed forward again; and in a few moments they stood by the bed side of Deacon Cheever. No Deacon Cheever was there; his affrighted wife sprang up in the bed and uttered one scream, before she recognized her neighbors. Out of breath, they half told their story, fled back, and left the good woman in any thing but an easy state of mind. Husband, what shall we do? what is to become of these dear little children?' said the terrified woman, as she again entered the house. 'Is the Deacon coming?' 'He is not at home.' 'Take care of these children,' said her husband; 'I will go for Mr. Snooks, the schoolmaster. He is a good man and will help us.' 'No! No!' exclaimed both the women, and fled from the house, and were in a short time in Mr. Snook's study; for he was yet up: Mr. Snooks was never known before, or after, to rise from his chair so quick. When he stood erect, he was good six feet four inches, and he stood erect now. With eyes and ears open, but with compressed mouth, he listened to to their broken story. Mr. Tobias Snooks uttered not a word, satisfied, no doubt, that more could be learned in five minutes by reconnoitering the enemy than by an hour's description.—He hastily drew up his blue stockings over his buck-skin breeches, tied one with a white garter, slapped his hat, wrong side foremost, on the top of a red night cap, and took a large cane, he thought not why.

Mr. Snooks set about arranging in his mind a form of exorcism, and he selected the Latin Language, having no doubt but his enemy would understand it better than any other, as it was well known in those days, that the Popes had been familiarly talking it with him several hundred years.

The distressed family felt some relief when they found so good and learned a man as Mr. Snooks under their roof; and to do their calculating prudence justice, I must say, that they had a vague kind of impression, that their unwelcome visitor would be satisfied with one victim, and as a Mr. Tobias Snooks would be the van of their contemplated attack on him, the said Mr. Snooks would be the scape goat for the rest of them. And so it proved to be.

After the arrival of the pedagogue the sounds overheard were dreadfully appalling. The trampling of the iron feet was incessant, the door shook without intermission, the groans were still interrupted, but louder and quicker groans than ever. The learned man turned ghastly pale, but a pale man may have courage. He re-arranged in his mind the form of exorcism, made all the preparation that a devout man would, make, and slowly ascended the stairs, at the head of which stood the door where he was to encounter such an enemy as he had never encountered before. The noise from the chamber fell on his ear like the knell of a departed spirit; his step would not have crushed a fly; he grasped his cane firmly in one hand, and laid the other to the latch of the door; that door alone separated him from the deadliest enemy of man; he could smell his very breath: he felt already his withering grasp. The family stood with heads thrust through a door at the side of the foot of the stairs. The moon cast a doubtful light. The chamber door flew open with violence—"Te adjuro per"—and down the stairs came Mr. Tobias Snooks like lightning back first, borne off by a four legged fiend in the shape of a hog, while he muttered forth adjurations and anathemas in latin with an energy and precision, which did great credit to his learning and classical taste.

I have but little more to tell my readers. The farmer had, during the afternoon of this eventful day, been carrying corn from his barn up into this chamber, and thence by a ladder into the garret. In the evening the family had left the outer door open; and as the house was perfectly still, the hog had, naturally enough, followed the scattered kernels of corn into the entry, up the stairs into the chamber. While nosing about for corn, he had shut the chamber door; and his increasing uneasiness had produced all those noises, which so much annoyed the good family, and confirmed Mr. Tobias Snooks in an opinion, of which he could hardly rid himself for the whole night, that it was nothing less than the "foul fiend" himself.

CANDIDUS.

At a late meeting of the society for the promotion of Arts, Manufactures, etc. at the King's Theatre, London a premium was voted to a Mr. Skinner, for a trap for vermine. "The novelty of this trap is that it sets itself: the animal in trying at the bait, draws out the support of the floor, and is, itself precipitated sideways into a chamber filled with water. The floor rights itself again, by means of a counterpoise, and the support of the floor returns to the place where it had been drawn out by the animal."

MAID, vs. WIDOW.

An article of trafic very prevalent among the Turcomans will strike the readers as curious and unique. The Turcoman buys his wife, and it is said will give in the proportion of ten to one, more for a widow than a maid. A lady that has been married, and acquired any degree of celebrity for skill in housewifery, will fetch from two to four thousand rupees. The average price of a maiden, unskilled in the economy of a household, is from two to four hundred only.

An Irishman swearing the peace against his three sons thus concluded his affidavit: "and this deponent further saith, that the only one of his children who showed him any real filial affection, was his youngest son Lary, for he never struck him when he was down."

An officer, distinguished by his inhumanity and constant oppression of the unfortunate, meeting Mrs. Charles Elliott in a garden adorned with a variety of flowers, asked the name of the camomile, which seemed to flourish with peculiar luxuriance—'The Rebel Flower,' she replied. 'Why was that name given to it?' said the officer. 'Because rejoined the lady,' 'it thrives most when most trampled upon.'

If your wife be seized with a violent fit of kindness, be very careful what promise you make while it lasts.

If you would live comfortably, always, whistle or laugh while your wife is scolding.

If your wife gets into a fury, take yourself off without trying to pacify her; a man who exposes himself to a storm, gets pelted, while the storm is never the shorter, or the loss severe.

LYON'S ANTI BILIOUS PILLS.

(PREPARED BY HIMSELF.)

ARE highly celebrated as a cure and preventative, in Intermittent, Remittent, Bilious, Inflammatory and Yellow Fevers, &c. &c.

The operation of these pills is perfectly mild, so as to be used by persons in every situation and of every age.

They are adapted to carry off superfluous bile, and prevent its morbid secretions—they restore the appetite—procure a free perspiration and thereby prevent cold; one single dose is sufficient to remove the cause of the most violent cold.

In sickness at the Stomach, severe Head-Ache, or habitual Costiveness—they have never failed to restore the patient, by giving a natural tone to the Alimentary Canal.

The Pills are neatly put up in Tin Boxes—each box containing twelve Pills, two of which being a common dose for a grown person and a less proportion for children, or those that are above fifty. Price per box Fifty Cents, with a liberal allowance to those who buy to sell again.

Directions for useing these Pills follow with the boxes, and pamphlets containing certificates and affidavits, may be viewed at those places where these Pills are for sale. Pamphlets bearing the following Motto—

"Altissimus creavit de terra medicamenta; et vir prudens non abhorrebit illa.—Ecclesiasticus, chap. 38, ver. 4."

☞Orders from any diistance will be attended to with despatch, if addressed to ISAAC LYON, Frederick, Md.

To prevent imposition by counterfeits, the seal with the initials, I. L. will be impressed on the boxes, and under every direction the name of ISAAC LYON will be subscribed in his own hand writing.

Hundreds of letters, certificates and affidavits, can be adduced in proof of the acknowledged virtues of these Pills; but let the following extract of a letter from Doctor Charles Little, suffice.

Winchester, Va. Feb. 21, 1823.

DEAR SIR—In answer to your favour of the 11th instant will state that the four dozen boxes of Pills are all sold, and were much approved of. I think them infinitely preferable to Lees, or in fact to any anti-bilious medicine ever offered to the public, and am much pleased with an opportunity of getting a supply, and will thank you to send me half a gross.

THE THOROUGH BRED STALLION,

RINALDO,

BY Sir ARCHY—bred by the Hon. John Randolph, of Roanoke, Virginia, will stand the present season at one of the subscriber's stables in EASTON, at the low price of $15 the spring's chance, which $10 will discharge if paid by the first of October next—$5 the single leap, and $20 to insure a mare with foal—25 cents in each case to be paid to the groom. The season will be extended to the first of August, or longer if required.

RINALDO

Is fifteen and an half hands high, and 5 years old this season, is a horse of uncommon bone and muscular powers. He is a deep or blood bay with black mane, tail, and legs—has never covered a mare, having just arrived from Roanoke in Virginia. He was got by Sir Archy, (who is now covering at $75 the spring's chance) his dam Miss Ryland, by Gracchus, Duette by Silvertail, Vanity by Celer, Mark Anthony, Jolly Rodger—see American Farmer of April 9, 1824. Although a train of fortuitous circumstances enables the subscribers to offer the services of Rinaldo unprecedentedly low, yet it is a fact, susceptable of proof, that he cannot be purchased for less than $2,000. We are mainly indebted to J. S. Skinner, Esq. to whose care and direction Mr. Randolph entrusted this noble animal, for enabling us to offer his services at a price within the reach of every farmer, and so much below the price now paying by citizens of other states for the services of horses from the same stud. Good pasturage may be procured in the neighbourhood of Easton for mares from a distance; and as Rinaldo will not travel, all mares must be brought to his stable.

The following extract from the advertisement of Roanoke, a brother to Rinaldo, now covering in Virginia, will be found applicable to him:—

"Like his sire, he is fit for the dray, waggon, or coach, as well as the turf, the field, and the road, in short, for every pupose to which this noble animal can be applied, but that of a shooting poney.

75 DOLLARS REWARD.

RANAWAY from the subscriber, on Thursday the 9th instant, a young negro man about twenty-two or twenty-three years of age, dark complexion, straight and well made but rather slothful in his walk, and has on his upper lip a very visible scar; his height is about five feet ten or eleven inches, and he has been commonly employed at the farming business, but recently in a tan yard. He took with him a dark grey kersey suit, new; also some old clothing which he has worn in the tan yard, he chews tobacco and drinks rum very freely, and calls himself STEPHEN MACKEY, but will probably change his name; the probability is that he will go through Delaware to Philadelphia or Baltimore; his father resides in Baltimore, and is named Samuel Mackey. The above reward will be given if taken out of the state and delivered to me at this place: Fifty dollars if taken within the state and out of the county and delivered, and Twenty-five dollars if taken in the county and delivered, or secured so that I can get him again.
