APOLLO'S FOUNT.

[The following verses fell accidentally into our hands. If the historians of the present day think the narration of these facts not of sufficient importance to hand down to posterity, we have no doubt they will outlive Weems' History of the late War; and that some clever fellow will hereafter thank the facetious poet and us for preserving from oblivion, a striking characteristic of the 'First Age' of the Republic; which Mr. Adams says has now passed.] N. THE MARTIAL PETTICOAT.

During the war of 1813, the British ships approaching New London, and threatening an instant attack, a battery was mounted on Grotton Bank, by a few volunteers, who found some difficulty in procuring flannel for cartridges, when the incidents described below took place.

When war's red banner wav'd on high,
And foes appear'd in view,
To guard our land from threaten'd storm,
Each patriot spirit flew.

On Grotton's Height a battery rear'd,
Demands the soldier's care,
And ammunition to provide
All hearts and hands prepare.

For flannel Major SMITH throws off
His drawers quick as thought,
And Mrs BAILEY instant gives
Her under-petticoat.

Take it, she cries, tell Briton's sons,
Sooner than strike our flag,
Columbia's children all as one,
Will part with their last rag.

With pleasure are the gifts receiv'd,
Courage and joy unite,
For they can ne'er be beaten, who
So promptly strip to fight.

But not for cartridges is us'd
The offering of the fair;
To nob'er purpose quick applied,
It streams aloft in air.

Our country is a ship, they say,
Then how so soon they man her,
As to her gallant sons display
Such heart inspiring banner!

For who would not, by duty led,
Beauty and Booty save,
With tenfold zeal, while o'er his head
Should such an ensign wave!

For me, the Turkish three-tail'd arms
Or Eagle, pride of world,
Have not such animating charms
As Petticoat unfurl'd.

Of old, the Grecian dog of war,
Or else the story lies,
To shun the siege of Troy employ'd
A Petticoat's disguise.

But we, as bold as Alexander,
All peril fearing not,
Would rather die while fight under
Our war-like Petticoat.

Indeed, 'tis said our President,
The brave and good MONROE,
With cordial heart and friendly grasp
Told Mrs. BAILEY so.—

Then health to both—but that our song
May end in this direction—
May we ne'er want, in time of need
For Petticoat protection. C. H.

STORY OF TWO HIGHLANDERS.

There is perhaps no quality of the mind, in which mankind differ more than in a prompt readiness either to act or answer to the point, in the most imminent and sudden dangers and difficulties; of which the following is a most pleasing instance.

On the banks of the Albany River, which falls into Hudson's Bay, there is amongst others a small colony settled which is mostly made up of emigrants from the Highlands of Scotland.—Though the soil of the valleys contiguous to the river is exceedingly rich and fertile, yet the winter being so long and severe, these people do not labour too incessantly in agriculture, but depend for the most part upon their hunting and fishing for their subsistence; there being commonly abundance of game and fish.

Two young kinsmen, both Macdonald, went out one day into these boundless woods to hunt, each of them armed with a well-charged gun in his hand, and a skene dhu, or Highland dirk, by his side. They shaped their course towards a small stream, which descends from the mountains to the N. W. of the river; on the banks of which they knew there were still a few wild swine remaining; and of all other creatures they wished most to meet with one of them; little doubting but that they would overcome even a pair of them, if chance would direct them to their lurking places, though they were reported to be so remarkable both for their strength and ferocity. They were not at all successful, having neglected the common game in searching for these animals; and a little before sunset they returned homeward, without having shot any thing save one wild turkey. But when they least expected it, to their infinite joy they discovered a deep pit or cavern, which contained a large litter of fine half-grown pigs, and none of the old ones with them. This was a prize indeed: so without losing a moment, Donald said to the other, "Mack, you pe te littlest man, creep you in and durk te little sows, and I'll pe keeping vatch at te door." Mack complied without hesitation—gave his gun to Donald—unsheathed his skene dhu, and crept into the cave head foremost; but after he was all out of sight, save the brogues, he stopped short; and called back, 'But Lord, Tonald, pe soor to keep out te old wans." "Ton't you pe fearing tat, man," said Donald.

The cave was deep, but there was abundance of room in the further end, where Mack, with his sharp skene dhu, now commenced the work of death. He was scarcely well begun, when Donald perceived a monstrous wild boar advancing upon him, roaring, and grinding his tusk, while the fire of rage gleamed from his eyes.—Donald said not a word for fear of alarming his friend; besides, the savage was hard upon him ere ever he was aware, he scarcely had time for any thing: so setting himself firm, and cocking his gun, he took his aim; but that the shot might prove the more certain death, he suffered the boar to come within a few paces of him before he ventured to fire; he at last drew the fatal trigger, expecting to blow out his eyes, brains and all. Merciful heaven! the gun missed fire, or flashed in the pan, I am not sure which.—There was no time to lose—Donald dashed the piece in the animal's face, turned his back, and fled with precipitation. The boar pursued him only a short space, for having heard the cries of his suffering young ones as he passed the mouth of the den, he hastened back to their rescue. Most men would have given up all for lost—it was not so with Donald—Mack's life was at stake. As soon as he observed the monster return from pursuing him, Donald faced about, and pursued him in his return; but having before this, from the horror of being all torn to pieces, run rather too far without looking back, the boar had by that oversight got considerably a-head of him—Donald strained every nerve—uttered some piercing cries—and even for all his haste did not forget to implore assistance from Heaven. His prayer was short, but pithy—"O Lord! puir Mack! puir Mack!" said Donald, in a loud voice, while the tears gushed from his eyes. In spite of all his efforts, the enraged animal reached the mouth of the den before him, and entered! It was, however, too narrow for him to walk in on all-four; he was obliged to drag himself in as Mack had done before; and of course, his hind feet lost their hold of the ground. At this important crisis Donald overtook him—laid hold of his large, long tail—wrapped it around both his hands—set his feet to the bank, and held back in the utmost desparation.

Mack, who was all unconscious of what was going on above ground, wondered what way he came to be involved in utter darkness in a moment. He waited a little while, thinking that Donald was only playing a trick upon him, but the most profound obscurity still continuing, he at length bawled out, "Tonald man, Tonald—phat is it that'll ay pe stopping te light?" Donald was too much engaged, and to breathless, to think of making any reply to Mack's impertinent question, till the latter having waited in vain a considerable time for an answer, repeated it in a louder cry. Donald's famous laconic, answer, which perhaps never was, or never will be equalled, has often been heard of—"Tonald, man Tonald, —I say phat is it that'll ay pe stopping te light?" bellowed Mack—"Should te tail preak, you'll fin' tat," said Donald.

Donald continued the struggle, and soon began to entertain hopes of ultimate success. When the boar pulled to get in, Donald held back, and when he struggled to get back again Donald set his shoulder to his large buttocks and pushed him in: and in this position he kept him, until he got an opportunity of giving him some deadly stabs with his skene dhu behind the short ribs, which soon terminated his existence.

Our two young friends by this advantage realized a valuable prize, and secured so much excellent food, that it took them several days to get it conveyed home. During the long winter nights while the family were regaling themselves on the hams of the great wild boar, often was the above tale related, and as often applauded and laughed at.

From the Columbus (Ohio) Gazette.

RUNAWAY LOVERS.

A short time since, there were seen passing through the streets of Columbus, in a wagon drawn by two yoked oxen, an old man and a young girl. Our attention was directed towards them by the remorseless repetition with which the old man plied his goad upon the patient oxen. The girl was looking, with apparent anxiety, either at the old barrels placed in the wagon behind the board upon which she sat, or down the street which had just been passed.—From the pitiless blows of the parchment faced, Bardolph nosed old man, who must have lived three score years, one of the oxen had commenced a trot, and the great object appeared to be to get the other into the same gait.—"He's coming," the girl of fifteen at last exclaimed. At the word, her aged companion instantly turned his head to look down the street, and at the same time gave his oxen a desperate and a more merciless blow than before. We looked in the same direction, and saw a lank, lean, bandy legged man pushing forward in an Indian trot on his goodly stumps. He soon came up to the modern knight of the goad and his young dulcinea, and in words filled with breath, exlcaimed, "I've caught you, you rascal—whew!—where are you going with my da'ter?—you hussy—whew—you—go home—start—quick!" "I wo'nt," answered the girl, in the true spirit of Zanippe. The altercation was kept up for a considerable time, and the girl manifested all that admirable obstinacy which is described in fiction.

At last the old man asked the father to step one side, (at the same time drawing a pint bottle half way out of his pocket,) and they could make a bargain. After calming the father's spirits with whiskey, the old man offered to give him two cows if he would give him his daughter. The father, upon examination of the cows, and finding they were worth more than the services of his daughter, concluded to receive them, and take them home in her place. The bargain made, to the satisfaction of both parties, they go to a justice of the peace: and the girl, throwing a white dress over her linsey woolsey, is prepared to become a bride. The justice refused to marry them without a license. The father and his grey son-in-law proceeded to the clerk's office—one dollar must be paid for the license. Alas, that one poor dollar should blast the budding joys of a blasted old man! Neither had a penny of money; and the clerk, without any of his usual sympathy, denied the license until his fees were paid. What could be done! No hero of a novel ever had such a matter of fact impediment placed in the way of the fruition of his hopes. The grey old lover, weighed down with age, would not pawn his own oxen to procure the money, but insisted that the father should find the means of paying for the license. Thereupon they disputed—broke off the bargain: the old man kept his cows, and the father took home his daughter.

A TRUE STORY.—The following has been communicated to us as a "fact mater:"

In a neighboring county, a widower who had acted the part of a brute and a tyrant to his wife, went, shortly after the demise of his spouse, to pay his respects to a buxom widow, who, like her suiter, had not the best reputation for suavity of manners and meekness of temper. The following dialogue ensued.

He—Well, Madam, I am come to see you.

Her—Well, you may just clear out again, for I'll have nothing to do with you. You need'nt think to get me. You abused and whipt your first wife—and I know what kind of a fellow you are.

He—Yes I did, and if I had you, I'd make you toe the trig—I'd give you a d——d good thrashing every time you deserved it.

Strange as it may appear, they were united in the "blissful bands of matrimony" in three days afterwards!

LYON'S ANTI BILIOUS PILLS.

(PREPARED BY HIMSELF.)

ARE highly celebrated as a cure and preventative, in Intermittent, Remittent, Bilious, Inflammatory and Yellow Fevers, &c. &c.

The operation of these pills is perfectly mild, so as to be used by persons in every situation and of every age.

They are adapted to carry off superfluous bile, and prevent its morbid secretions—they restore the appetite—procure a free perspiration and thereby prevent cold; one single dose is sufficient to remove the cause of the most violent cold.

In sickness at the Stomach, severe Head-Ache, or habitual Costiveness—they have never failed to restore the patient, by giving a natural tone to the Alimentary Canal.

The Pills are neatly put up in Tin Boxes—each box containing twelve Pills, two of which being a common dose for a grown person and a less proportion for children, or those that are above fifty. Price per box Fifty Cents, with a liberal allowance to those who buy to sell again.

Directions for using these Pills follow with the boxes, and pamphlets containing certificates and affidavits, may be viewed at those places where these Pills are for sale. Pamphlets bearing the following Motto—

"Altissimus creavit de terra medicamenta; et vir prudens non abhorrebit illa.—Ecclesiasticus, chap. 38, ver. 4."

☞Orders from any distance will be attended to with despatch, if addressed to ISAAC LYON, Frederick, Md.

To prevent imposition by counterfeits, the seal with the initials, I. L. will be impressed on the boxes, and under every direction the name of ISAAC LYON will be subscribed in his own hand writing.

Hundreds of letters, certificates and affidavits, can be adduced in proof of the acknowledged virtues of these Pills; but let the following extract of a letter from Doctor Charles Little, suffice.

Winchester, Va. Feb. 21, 1823.

DEAR SIR—In answer to your favour of the 11th instant will state that the four dozen boxes of Pills are all sold, and were much approved of. I think them infinitely preferable to Lees, or in fact to any anti-bilious medicine ever offered to the public, and am much pleased with an opportunity of getting a supply, and will thank you to send me half a gross.
