

THE ARMY OF THE U. STATES.

The General and Field officers, composing our Army, are veterans in the true meaning of the word...

Brigadier General Edmund P. Gaines, of Tennessee; Major General Irwin, is 57 years of age; has served 32 years; was distinguished by his services in the late war...

Brigadier General Winfield Scott, of Virginia, Major General Irwin, and Commander of the Eastern Department of the Army, is 49 years of age; has served 31 years; was highly distinguished in the late war...

Brigadier General John E. Wool, of New York, is 60 years of age; served with distinction throughout the whole of the late war...

Commissary General George Gibson, of Pennsylvania, is about 50 years of age. He was formerly in the 5th Regiment of Infantry...

Brigadier General Charles Griffin, of Missouri, is about 40 years of age. He served during the whole of the late war in the western army with reputation...

Office of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company,

January 5th, 1852.

At a special meeting of the Board of Directors, held this day, the President stated that he had received intelligence from the Counsel of the Company...

Resolved, That, although the Company should be excluded from the route, which had been selected for the construction of the Railroad, on the North Bank of the Potomac...

Resolved, That the President be directed to take the most efficient measures to ascertain the best route to the Ohio River...

Resolved, That this Board cannot too highly estimate the support that it has hitherto received from the Stockholders...

Resolved, That the President be directed to take the most efficient measures to ascertain the best route to the Ohio River...

Resolved, That the President be directed to take the most efficient measures to ascertain the best route to the Ohio River...

Resolved, That the President be directed to take the most efficient measures to ascertain the best route to the Ohio River...

Resolved, That the President be directed to take the most efficient measures to ascertain the best route to the Ohio River...

The Jackson (Tennessee) Statesman mentions the fact, almost without a precedent in that State, that three persons had frozen to death in that vicinity.

HORSEMANSHIP.—Unparalleled feats of the greatest equestrian performance on record. It is the narrative of Mr. Obaldesberg's match to ride 200 miles in 10 consecutive hours...

From another London paper, the following list of the most remarkable feats of the same character, but not so astonishing as that of Mr. Obaldesberg, is taken:—

In Oct. 1741; at the Curragh Meeting in Ireland, Mr. Wilderode 137 miles in six hours and 31 minutes, with 19 horses. The time stipulated was nine hours.

In Dec. 1810, Mr. Milton rode the horse dealer who weighed 15 stone, rode from London to Stamford (starting from the corner of Dover Street) in four hours and 25 minutes, using 18 horses.

Foreign News.

New York, Jan. 8. EIGHT DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND. The Liverpool packet ship, Hibernia, Captain Maxwell, arrived yesterday.

We have rarely received of late, papers from Europe so devoid of interest. A difference of opinion seems to prevail in England, as to whether Asiatic Cholera does not, in fact, exist, or if it does exist, it is in a small and limited form.

On the 10th November, a Cabinet Council was held in London, for the purpose, it was said, of deliberating on the re-ascendancy of Parliament. An opinion is expressed that it was not the intention of the Government to call that body together on the 22d of November...

On the 10th November, a Cabinet Council was held in London, for the purpose, it was said, of deliberating on the re-ascendancy of Parliament. An opinion is expressed that it was not the intention of the Government to call that body together on the 22d of November...

Intelligence has reached England of the differences which had arisen between the Officers of the East India Company and the local authorities at Canton. It is observed that this is a proper time by some prompt step to bring the Chinese to their senses...

Two or three new instances are mentioned of the commission of the almost incredible crime of "Bourgeois" the persons associated are in one paper strangely enough termed "violations to the interests of science."

An Official description of the Belgian Flag has been received at the Department of State; it contains three broad vertical stripes of which the outer is black, the middle one yellow, and the outer red.

Denmark was once a limited and elective Monarchy, but in 1660, it was made absolute hereditary, by a revolution almost unparalleled in history...

The articles dictated by the Conference of King Leopold were to be formally recognized by the Great Powers. The King of Holland and not yet acceded to the articles, but it would not be too difficult to find a plausible ground for supposing that he would venture much longer to withhold his assent to them.

"COUP D'ETAT OF EUROPE."

To the Editor of the London Morning Chronicle. Paris, Nov. 9, 1851.

Sir—Let us continue our view, and endeavor to understand the position of Europe at the close of the year 1851. Norway will only merit a passing word. A million of inhabitants are the most we can assign to it—and this is more an affair of guess than of fact.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Denmark was once a limited and elective Monarchy, but in 1660, it was made absolute hereditary, by a revolution almost unparalleled in history...

The articles dictated by the Conference of King Leopold were to be formally recognized by the Great Powers. The King of Holland and not yet acceded to the articles, but it would not be too difficult to find a plausible ground for supposing that he would venture much longer to withhold his assent to them.

"COUP D'ETAT OF EUROPE."

To the Editor of the London Morning Chronicle. Paris, Nov. 9, 1851.

Sir—Let us continue our view, and endeavor to understand the position of Europe at the close of the year 1851. Norway will only merit a passing word. A million of inhabitants are the most we can assign to it—and this is more an affair of guess than of fact.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Denmark was once a limited and elective Monarchy, but in 1660, it was made absolute hereditary, by a revolution almost unparalleled in history...

The articles dictated by the Conference of King Leopold were to be formally recognized by the Great Powers. The King of Holland and not yet acceded to the articles, but it would not be too difficult to find a plausible ground for supposing that he would venture much longer to withhold his assent to them.

"COUP D'ETAT OF EUROPE."

To the Editor of the London Morning Chronicle. Paris, Nov. 9, 1851.

Sir—Let us continue our view, and endeavor to understand the position of Europe at the close of the year 1851. Norway will only merit a passing word. A million of inhabitants are the most we can assign to it—and this is more an affair of guess than of fact.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.

Sweden contains a population of about 3 millions. It is divided into four general states and each of these is subdivided into provinces. Sweden, before the accession of Gustavus I. was an elective monarchy.