With mountain tain upon mountain, as far as the eye can HURLEY, SLOAN & Co., reach, the landscape is full of inspiration to the poet and artist. With an abundance of mountain spring water, and an invigorating Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps atmosphere, table supplies fresh from the garden, and restful nights, it is not strange that appetites are keen. Three full meals a day are relished, and with rambling, reading and games, the days are short and recreating to body and mind. A Word About Advertising .- A gentleman in an adjoining State sends the HURLEY, SLOAN & CO. JOURNAL a copy of an advertisement and an offer. In addition to the stereotyped portion he says:

Low as this may seem to you experience proves I am paying now every cent I can afford. The last advertisement in your paper did not pay me, etc.

If our friend could know what "experience proves" on the side of publishers, he might revise his idea of the utility of advertising. Leaving out of view the apparent fact that advertising does not pay him, and thus nobody else, were all to take his view no mediums of advertising could exist. That he realized no return from his last investment in the Journal is proof-not that the JOURNAL is not a good medium-but that the advertiser happened to announce something for sale that nobody within our range wanted. He might as well complain of the lost premiums he paid on his fire insurance policies-because, as he did not burn out, he got no return from his investment in insurance. No paper can guarantee returns, for advertising. Like the gospel, it must be first fired at the mass, and if so be one sinner be converted, verily the compensation is great. If not, the moral effect of the whole matter is-the advertiser has proven that no loser of bargains can "shake their gory locks at him and say he did it."

The Old-Timers .- Under the caption of "Ye Olden Time," the Cumberlan Times publishes a lengthty and interesting letter from H. D. Black, of New York, a former resident of this figures for county. It is full of pleasant reminiscences, among them the following
