market is gleaned as follows: The shipments of soft coal continue as for the past two weeks. They are not as great as the trade demands and it is only by concentrating shipments to one point that shippers are able to keep their contracts. Baltimore is now open and Philadelphia is beginning to show signs of reviving, although no great amount is being shipped from either. Shippers do not seem much inclined to make contracts to as great extent for next year as they did a year ago. They are deterred by the fear that the same conditions which have prevented them from carrying out their contracts fully may again prevail. No
