FAME.

BY WILLIAM MARTIN JOHNSON. The stone of fame shall moulder down, Long dried from soft affection's tears,

Ah! who would strive for fame that flies Like forms of mist before the gale? Renown but breathes before it dies, -A meteor's path ! an idiot's tale !

Its place unheeded and unknown.

Beneath retirement's sheltering wing, From mad conflicting crowds remote,

There clasp your fair one to your breast, By turns caressing and carest, -Your infant prattlers sporting near.

And poverty shall guard your door, -Of wealth and fame, if you have less Than monarchs, you of bliss have more.
