received. To this reply, unable to answer, and suspension of the publication of his character and Mr. Pickering's accounts, till he should have liberty from Mr. Gallatin to enter the register's office & substantiate his charge. Campbell, a few weeks since, went to Washington, and applied to Mr. Gallatin for a clerkship, stating his merits, and informing the secretary that he had been dismissed from office before, on account of his political sentiments. Mr. Gallatin, much to his honor, told him he had been heretofore unfaithful, and he did not want him. We believe he never had the blindness or temerity to ask admission to the Register's office to examine the accounts of Mr. Pickering, as he had promised.

On the 8th of Dec. last, the first day of doing business in congress, Mr. Nicholson moved the appointment of a committee to examine critically the accounts of Mr. Pickering, to the end that all clamors and slanders of that character might be silenced; observing at the same time that for his part he entertained not the least suspicion that Mrs. Pickering had ever defrauded the public or appropriated to his own use one dollar of the public money. This was the substance, and these nearly the words used by Mr. Nicholson. Such an open unequivocal declaration from such a character was sufficient to still all clamors; but now learn how Jacobin editors delight to deceive. The editor of the National Intelligencer observed that some debate took place on Mr. N's motion but not affecting the merits of the case: Duane converted the plain confession of Mr. N. on the subject to, he was willing to believe, &c. or something similar; the collector of the Baltimore American with just so much honesty as we had reason to expect, gave a part of Mr. Nicholson's remarks, but stopped when he came to his declaration of Mr. Pickering's integrity.

The truth is, and when the committee, appointed for that purpose, shall report, it will appear, that there are not more than a few more than ever or how a delinquent. On the contrary, the accounts of Mr. Pickering are all settled except a few thousand dollars, which are known to have been duly appropriated at the time, but for which vouchers are not yet arrived. Nor ought we to be surprised at this, when it is known that Mr. Jefferson now stands charged with many thousands of dollars (we believe upwards of 30) charges made when he was secretary of state. Probably Mr. Jefferson's accounts not being settled, may be attributed to the same cause as the small sums of Mr. Pickering's yet unsettled, certainly we have no disposition to believe that Mr. Jefferson has defrauded the public, or is in fact delinquent, tho' the length of time gives us more suspicion, (were we inclined to entertain any) of misconduct on his part.

Mr. Pickering was ever, as to pecuniary matters, a man of prudence tho' not of parsimony. When he left the office of secretary of state, he had saved not quite one hundred dollars of his salary. It were not improper here to mention that, in one instance, by a profitable purchase of bills on London, he made, (as the word is used in traffic) upwards of 14 thousand dollars. This however was not put in his own purse, but in the public treasury: a sum we believe almost equal to the amount of his whole salary while in office.

It is presumed the infamous vessel the ship by means of a large Mr. Yellett's wharf, and thro' the holes cut in the deck for the brands of light wood, (some of which afterwards found, with other inflammable matter) into a parcel of oakum spread over the rigging of the main and mizzen mast, then strips, lying between decks; also as a deception, through a second quantity of fire under the canvas; the rebels catching fire exhibited for some time all the symptoms of total devastation and ruin. But by the exertions of the captain, aided by a number of well-disposed citizens, the fire was soon got under.

As it is evident that this horrid deed was actually done designedly; in order, if possible, to check such lawless and dreadful proceedings in the bud, here, the citizens are called upon to aid and assist in discovering and bringing to justice, the perpetrator or perpetrators of the present villainy; for when such heinous wickednesses are passed over as mere occurrences of the day, there is an end to safety in property or person to honest industry—even the most enormous crimes become habitual, and the extent incalculable: witness the late awful consequences in Boston, Charlestown, &c. &c.

Deeds of so much horror and magnitude are generally rendered successful by the of accomplices; if there are any in the present case, whose conscience revolts at the dreadful idea of burning with fire so many of his fellow creatures, besides the property destroyed and in danger and will come forward and tell the honest truth, so as it may effect the conviction of the offenders, a REWARD OF FIFTY DOLLARS will be given to any person who shall disclose the names of the perpetrators, not having been deemed unworthy to be named in the above notice.
