

each - But I must stop - What will you think of me to scattle in this wild strain! - I do not forget upon this packet of important nothing - I know "spinning long letters is a propensity common to ladies" - I wish I regret to say much for my father to Mr. Emory, while I remain at school. I would most sincerely have it other wise, could I at the same time have as undisturbed conscience - I feel assured that Mr. Archer repeated in me the most implicit confidence and could I find unworthiness of it? Ah no! I should not have me even at a sacrifice - and besides, Mr. Emory I have said nothing to make strength upon this subject. Without his approval everything is undecided. But of course I presume to write such with his approbation - Notwithstanding all this, you know that it is a subject dear to him as a father He shall probably be at home in April for a week or two and then, I can tell you precisely how it is - Mr. Nicholson called to see us a few days ago - and he left you all well &c. He says he had something to tell me and looked very significantly as if it might be a secret - Have you been confiding in this detestable gentleman? But the hypothesis also upon all kinds of representations that strength so sad wherein he passed head off us - on Mother's account of course I presume - You will surely speed make them both - that they and in love - and the confidence is preposterous in the extreme Mollie is nothing but a fever child - I do not intend that she shall be entangled to poor I add me for - Besides she doesn't entertain a thought of the kind passion - is no doubt very misinstructed, selfish like her sister - I fear very much amused with your page of scandal, and wish you would always favour your next one - Poor Pauline Brown is certainly in a most deplorable situation I should think he would reproach himself for having broken so many hearts - It seems so much like life - I have almost reached the bottom of my despair fortunately for you - I know cannot decipher half I have written but it matters not. Do not I pray ask any one as sustained not even Mr. Wright - (He can put up any difficulty correspond but appears - I believe in it does not speak to it - I hope you can reply to it if you please - But I cannot write again - I send her love -
I am your truly friend
