

this case through the court and went up to the Privy Council with it, without knowing to what extent it would be beneficial to you, as furnishing bauxite ore?

THE WITNESS: I might answer that question by saying from surface indications and the few test pits we put down in the deposits, that the tonnage was sufficient to make it worth fighting the case.

THE EXAMINER: All right.

BY MR. WHITELEY:

Q What was the occasion of your making this examination of the properties to determine whether boundary surveys had been made of the properties by persons other than your solicitor?

MR. SMITH: I object to that as incompetent and irrelevant. I do not see what that has to do with the case.

(Further discussion off the record.)

MR. SMITH: I renew my objection to it as incompetent and irrelevant.

THE EXAMINER: All right, go ahead.

THE WITNESS: On visiting Demerara, after the title had been passed to me, I was informed or heard that a boundary survey had been made. I consulted my local solicitor and he told me he had not been notified that such a survey had been made, and he had not granted --
