

I want to know what it was we seem to have a little difference of opinion on what you said.

A Would you mind reading it from the record, what I said this morning?

Q Can't you recall. Then look here, I will ask you a question. Isn't there a great deal of bauxite in the world?

A There is a great deal of bauxite in the world.

Q There is bauxite in the United States; bauxite in the Guianas; bauxite in Europe. These are all known deposits, aren't they?

A They are a matter of public record.

Q You were qualified by Mr. Whiteley as an expert. Is that your opinion, that they are?

A I don't like the word expert. I admitted I have studied the question of bauxite deposits for the last thirteen years, that I have studied them diligently. The question of whether a man is an expert or not depends upon his mental calibre.

Q But you think you are an expert, competent to pass upon the question of the amount of available bauxite in the world?

A I will say I know more about the bauxite situation than the average person or I may say the average engineer in the United States.

Q That does not answer the question. Do you still consider you are competent to pass an opinion as to the amount of com-
