

Now I will tell you about these things, truthfully, as well as I can.

The curb did not seem to affect him from the first. He never favored that leg at all, and while I have not been able to take away all appearance of it, there is no tenderness at all.

He does strict duty, and is driven on the road every day, and at some part of the drive is always carried up to his clip. That is the only blemish on him.

Now as to his gait. He is extremely open and gaited, and has plenty of knee action, and a great length of stride.

But an account of this same wild way of going Mr. C. is desired.

He knows ^{however} that his ideal may be a strange one, and so he traces like somebody of more experience, see the correct gait.

The Chestnut's are an extremely fastidious people, and are great for books.
