

where Louise proved herself a jewel of the first water.

After lunch they decided to go to the Opera, with the five dollar part of the house, each paying for herself, Helen feeling it deeply and Louise not at all - as one has an allowance and the other her father's money. In the evening they went in the family circle, where the true loves of music (and economy) go.

To-morrow evening is the Shakespeare Club, and Biddle has asked Louise to go to the theatre with him Tuesday evening. He is apparently delighted when he can take a girl to the theatre. If only he could dance I think he could enjoy society very well.
Alan is so indifferent it is hard to understand him. Not to me,
