

He stayed a short time, while we were dressing, and showed us a piece he had cut out from ~~the~~ some Boston paper, in which something like this was said: "I doubt if all the good done by the pulpit in a year in Massachusetts, counterbalances the evil done at Harvard college in one month." The writer is William Lloyd Garrison, and he was trying to show the evils of foot-ball. It was not a fair article at all, as he picked out only the worst cases and results of foot-ball, and made them appear the usual ones.

We are having a rather lively argument carried on in the "Crimson", about the action ^{which} the directors of the Harvard Dining Assoc. recently took. The cause of it all is, as nearly as I can find out, that a man came into the gallery of Memorial Hall with some ladies, and did not take off
