

makes up for all <sup>4</sup>tediousness, and he has not had the opportunities and probably the talents that Mr. Mc Kenzie has had.

Moreover, a great many ministers do not preach so well as Cousin Charley.

Now the reason that I write all this is not a deep one, but I thought that as I write a whole lot about what I do, and about small trifles, it certainly would not be out of place to say something about how I think and feel.

However, one cannot express his best thoughts very well, so I shall merely add that I do a great deal of what I like to call thinking, about spiritual things. A fellow whom I met at Ed.

Water's room one night, argued with us about the probability of there being a God. He was not by any means an atheist, nor did he wish to prove anything against Christianity, but he asked
