

minds & matter present to the Episcopist's inexhaustible supplies, from which he may select the best materials to engage his pen. The past & present are sources whence issue unceasing streams of knowledge, moral, religious & political. The future, too, has its light & shade, its hopes & fears, dangers to be shunned & promises to be realized; & constitutes a fund as ample & various, as it is interesting to the reformer, the revolutionist or philanthropist; & all whose fortunes depend on the events of tomorrow.

To such our paper presents the means of improvement, and opportunities of enlightening the public's minds.

We conclude with an expression of thanks to those,
 who have given us their liberal encouragement.
