Depart off Black Island June 11th 1844

My dear Sir

In a Letter I wrote to you some days ago by a Swedish Brig (which I hope has arrived safe with the Cargo of Live Stock - I consigned to you under a pass from myself) I alluded to a subject which I now take the liberty of ^{unreservedly} explaining myself upon, and I shall do so, as concisely as possible, hoping and indeed confidently trusting that you will render your powerful assistance in promoting an object so deeply interesting to me.

It is not necessary that I should trouble you with the reasons which impel me to the measure. I suffice to say that my mind has been long devoted upon it and therefore I will not further trespass upon your time than to urge very emphatically that you will allow arrangements to be made, whereby I may be at liberty to return to England. I know that
