Dr James Hall

Dear Sir

Dr. Leving lost one train by being only a few minutes late, and now will only have time to reach Baltimore at the last hour.

He thinks he ought to buy in Baltimore, a sofa, a large arm-chair, a barrell of flour, a barrell of beef, a barrell of pork, tea, and so forth and so forth. Some of them, I suppose, it would be well for him to have. On others, such as sofa and chair, his judgment differs from mine.

We have already expended a considerable amount on his outfit, for which he had no claim upon us. But if any article is wanting, without which, ^{in your judgment,} it would be wrong for him to go, and there is time, you will confer a favor by procuring it for him on our account. He has some money, — the gift of friends, — and if he chooses to expend any of it on articles which are not indispensable, you will confer a favor by advising him in respect to their purchase.

If he should be detained on the
