A Strange Case

An Experience In Transference of Sensation

By ALLAN G. LAMOND

I read recently in a newspaper an item which reminded me of an experience of my own that occurred years ago when I was a young man. The item stated that when one of a pair of twins was ill the other, no matter how far apart they were, was ill also. That there are strong bonds between children born of the same mother and at the same birth is a well known fact, but I had not heard before this that they suffered or were benefited alike as if they were the same person.

I was one night sleeping comfortably in my bed when I awoke oppressed with a sense of danger. I fancied I could hear men running over my head, but their footsteps did not sound as if they were confined in the room above me, for I could hear them coming from a distance. They sounded very loud when directly over my head and died away rapidly as they receded. I listened for something more and presently heard confused sounds, as though something had happened and persons were calling to each other. Then I heard a rapid succession of what I took for orders and persons hastening to obey them. Lastly I smelled smoke.

I sprang out of bed, ran to the window and looked out. All was still in the street below. I went to the door, opened it and listened. There was not a sound. I heard a clock ticking in the hall below, and the beats of the pendulum were loud in the prevailing silence. Nevertheless I smelled smoke. I determined to go downstairs and upstairs, find out about it and awaken the others in the house if there was fire.

I went downstairs, keeping my eyes open for a light, passed through living and dining room into the kitchen and, finding no trace of fire, went down into the furnace room, sure that I should find the trouble there. The furnace was properly arranged for the night, and, though I examined every point liable to danger, I found nothing wrong. Fancying the trouble might be above the floor on which I slept, I ran back upstairs to the attic. But, though I looked everywhere, continually sniffing the air in this and that corner, I found no fire. And yet I could not get rid of the odor of something burning.

"I SUSPECTED THAT HE WAS ABOUT TO HAVE ME SENT TO A SANITARIUM."

I went back to my room and to bed, leaving the door open so that if fire were smoldering anywhere I would know it as soon as it broke out. The clock in the hall below gave a single stroke, and I knew it was 1 o'clock. It must have been half past 12 when I awoke, for I had been half an hour making my search. I did not go to sleep again that night, for whenever I was in that intermediate state between consciousness and sleep I heard again those confused sounds of persons hurrying and working as if to prevent some calamity. This would rouse me, and when morning came I had not slept since my awakening.

All day I was depressed with a sense of danger. Now and again the odor of smoke would come back to me, sometimes faintly, sometimes very perceptibly. I was constantly starting, thinking that the building I was in—and I was in a number during the day—was on fire. This feeding was enhanced by a fancy that I heard the throb of pumping machinery. It seemed that the fire, if it were a fire, had sprung from an incipient blaze to a flame and that it was being deluged with water.

Fires usually burn out or are extinguished within a few minutes or a few hours, or at most half a day. But my fire of sensation—I can think of no better words to describe it—was burning on when I went to bed that night. True, the odor was not so much that of live as of dead smoke or smoke coming from wet, charred substances. But the throbbing continued without intermission. Yet the feeling of worry gradually subsided, though every now and again I seemed to get a puff of smoke and smell live fire. Then I would feel a horrible dread for awhile, which would gradually again pass off.

These conditions continued with me for several days. Then one night I was awakened by a loud knock at my door. I sprang out of bed, sure that at last the house was really burning, and, throwing open the door, asked what was the matter. To my astonishment I received no reply. Thinking that some one had awakened me, then gone to awaken others in the house, I listened for more sounds.

All was perfectly still, save for the ticking of the clock in the hall below. Trembling, I went back to bed, but not to sleep. Fire and smoke appeared to surround me, and it seemed that people were crowding one another to escape from it. I could not shake off the sensation that I, too, was flying from fire, which grew hotter and hotter, the smoke denser and denser.

And now I was rising and falling and swaying from side to side. My bed was really stationary, but to me it was in constant motion. Yet it had one beneficial effect upon me—it rocked me to sleep. During the whole of this period since I had first been awakened by running footsteps over my head I had slept but little, and now I could not keep awake. I slept till afternoon the next day, and when I awoke I felt much refreshed. The air was for the first time free from the odor of smoke. Not even was there a trace in it of partly burned substances. The sense of danger I had so long felt had left me entirely. In short, I had returned to a normal condition.

This immunity from trouble remained with me but a short time; then the trouble returned, though it came in an entirely different form. In the early morning I awoke with a cry, believing that some one had dashed cold water over me. It was light, and, though I could see plainly, no one was in my room, and I was perfectly dry. But there was a vague sense of struggling. I seemed to rise and fall, to be thrown hither and thither, as if in a surging crowd. Then I began to feel languid, and all sensation except a normal one left me.

This was the last of these singular impressions. For some time I dreaded that they would return, but after awhile I regained confidence and ceased to fear them. During the time I suffered from them I told no one except my physician. He listened to my account of my symptoms, as he called them, with great attention and interest, but I knew he did not understand them. He evidently considered that I was suffering from some mental disorder. Finally I suspected that he was about to have me sent to a sanitarium. This was about the time that my fire dread left me, and it altered his plans for me. When the trouble returned in another form I refrained from letting him know about it. I have since realized—indeed, learned from him—that I narrowly escaped being shut up.

It was about two months after my last singular sensation that my brother Jim, who had been a year in South America, one morning walked into my place of business. He had been drifting a great deal and during his wanderings had gone by sea clean around the continent from Colon to Panama. He told me the remarkable experience he had had on the voyage, which naturally astonished me.

"I was awakened one night," he said, "by men running forward over my stateroom and, hearing a turmoil, got up, dressed myself and went on deck. I found, to my horror, that the ship was on fire. The captain ordered the hatches over that part battened down and through holes only large enough to admit hose pumped in a stream of water. By this means he kept the fire under, though we all dreaded that it would get ahead of us. We were steaming northward, not far from the coast, and there was no harbor near. The captain was confident that he could keep the fire under till we reached a convenient port and allayed the fear of us all as far as he could. Nevertheless we felt that we were liable to be placed between death by fire and death by drowning at any moment.

"The fire was kept under for several days. Finally, just before dawn one morning, while I was asleep in my berth, there came a loud rap at my door. I knew very well it meant that the fire had got ahead of the efforts of the crew to keep it under, and, dressing myself hastily, I ran up on deck. I found the crew getting out the boats and saw flames bursting from the forecastle. A rush for each boat was made as it was lowered, but this was needless, for there was room for all. We were but a few miles from shore, with a strong west wind blowing and no landing. We were obliged to go on to a beach, and nearly all the boats were capsized. The boat I was in was overturned about a hundred yards from the shore, and for a long while I was driven in, then pulled out by the waves. At last I lost consciousness and on being thrown on the sand was drawn from the next wave by one of the crew who had got ashore safely. I was soon revived and felt as well as ever."

I compared the dates embracing my singular sensations with Jim's experiences on the burning ship and found that they coincided exactly. And when we figured the difference of longitude between the eastern coast of North America and the western coast of South America we found that even the hour of my first sensation and the beginning of his experience were the same.

Jim's recital told me to my own satisfaction that I had passed through what he had passed through, though only the salient features. And this brings me back to the newspaper item I mentioned at the beginning of my story, stating that when one of a pair of twins is ill the other is ill. I found it a confirmation of my own case or my own case its confirmation, for Jim and I are twins.

WEAK KIDNEYS OFTEN THE RESULT OF OVERWORK

On several occasions I have been unable to work and suffered severe pains in the back, due to my kidneys. I called on a doctor of Ripon, Wis., but received no relief.

I tried Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root which gave me instant relief. I was then able to resume work. Swamp-Root is the only relief I can get from kidney disease which I am subject to in the spring of the year. I am writing this testimonial through my own free will that sufferers of kidney and bladder diseases will know of the wonderful merits of Swamp-Root. I recommend Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root whenever I can and always have a bottle of Swamp-Root in my home.

I purchased Swamp-Root of Mr. C. J. Burnside, Druggist, of 202 Main street, Ripoo, Wis.

Very truly yours
THOMAS J. LYNCH,
525 Newbury Street. Ripon, Wis.

I have read the above statement that Thomas J. Lynch bought Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root at my store and made oath the above statement is true in substance and fact.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving remembrance of my dear mother, Sarah E. Crew, who departed this life one year ago Jan. 13th, 1912.

Oh dearest mother, since you have passed away
It seems not one year, but only yesterday;
Whenever we speak your name our eyes with tears are wet;
Oh, mother, dear, we loved you, and love cannot forget,
The Lord took you from us; it was his holy will,
And let in our hearts a vacancy which never can be filled,
But in our saddest moments one happy thought holds sway,
We will meet again, dearest mother, and be happy some sweet day.

DAUGHTER LILLIE.

In sad but loving remembrance of our daughter, MARY E. RASH, who departed this life two years ago, Jan. 14th, 1911.

January is once more here,
The saddest month of all the year:
Two years ago this sad day
Our dear Mary from us was called away.
There is grief that cannot find comfort
And wounds that cannot be healed,
And sorrow too deep in the human heart
That cannot be revealed.
But we pray we may find our treasure,
The link from loves broken chain,
And the tender touch of our daughter's hand
We may clasp them once again.
She has crossed the shining river
And has gained that radiant shore,
Where no heart with grief can quive
And all parting scenes are o'er.
The God whom we love in His wisdom
Knows well what is right and best,
And we pray today for patience
Till we meet in the land of rest.

MOTHER AND FATHER.
