COME TO KENT COUNTY.

We believe that old Kent offers advantages such as no other county can put forward. It is rich in soil, the climatic conditions are delightful, and the transportation companies offer fine fabllities. Here are found the best fruits and vegetables, fine cattle and grazing lands.

At a recent Grange meeting the statement was made that the day for small farms had gone and that to live the farmer must cultivate 80 to 100 acres, employing at least four horses; that there was no future for the 30 to 40 acre farm.

This is a dangerous position to take in that it must, so faras it has influence, demoralize any live farm sentiment. It seems impossible that any man familiar with farm life in the East could have been led so far afield. It is true that the margins have narrowed, and will narrow still more in the future. It is also true that the cost of high living is felt on the farm in desire for more of the comforts; but it is not true that men, with small holdings, are not supporting their families in comfortable manner and adding yearly a balance for old age.
