THE FIFTH DECADE OF A WANDERING BOY

(Written especially for the KENT NEWS.)

The next week I got my commission much to the surprise of the people as Welch had kept it all a secret, because they thought that they could tie it over until the Boss was put in.

In after years my friend, whom we had asked for the petition wanted to know who had told us that he was not going to write the petition for us, but I told him I would never tell him until the man was dead. Some years after that I met him at John Brice's, at a fish party and I was very anxious that Wm. Hyland should be Judge of the Orphans Court. I told Wm. Walker if he would support Hyland we would vote for him. My venerable friend, Bennett Wilson was also at Brice's and we asked him if he would become a candidate, as we wanted all three men for the Orphan's Court, and told him that he would have to carry only his District for our two friends and we would give him the 1st and 2nd districts and he agreed. My friend, the attorney from Chestertown, was also there. I was charged with bringing Wilson out and my friend sent for me and asked me to take a walk down the road. I knew there was something wrong; after a while he said, "I understand you have come down here and got Wilson out and I want you to withdraw him and get him out." I said I would not, that Mr. Wilson was a free man and has a right to be a candidate. Then he talked of he and I being good friends and I asked him if he remembered when he refused to grant me a petition for Judge of the Orphans Court. He did not deny it and I said now that my friend is gone I will tell you his mame, it was Arthur Wheatley and I have never doubted that you did not say exactly what he told me. I told him that I was very glad Wheatley had told me, had he not probably I would have been beaten easily.

I also told him that I was a young man but I had never spent such a day as that one in my life. "Well," he said, "that is all ended and all I want you to do is to get Wilson out," which I would not do. So we went into the fight, Walker, Hyland and Wilson and won it very easily.

The Board was a new one and about the 3rd Tuesday in January we met, my associates being James Beck and Cornelius Scott, good upright men. Judge Scott kept the minutes of the Court We had not been in long before we were harassed by the attorneys of the town as they would have persons summoned by the court to come before the court and on the minutes we did not take down who wanted him summoned. Finally we adopted a rule that if an attorney wanted anyone summoned he would have to sign an order as it had embarassed the court and given us much trouble, as some of the people summoned by the lawyers were wanted to talk politics.

Now we had a large estate to settle and the two executives would play hide and seek with each other. One man would come this Tuesday and ask the court to summon the other; the next Tuesday he would come and the court would not know who had summoned him. They were suspicious of each other and the older wanted the younger executive summoned the next Tuesday. We asked him to sign the order which he refused and we told him we would not draw it then as some one must pay the Sheriff for his trouble and they expected the court to settle the matter when called on.

In the next article I will give you the Samuel Canady case which was before the court with prominent lawyers for 21 days, which I think will be very interesting.

As I write in regard to Daniel Clark a young lawyer from Southern Maryland, seemed to be in robust health, a man of great ability. I had heard Judge Brent, my friend, often speak of him. He came to Annapolis one day to try a case before the Anne Arundel court and I met him as he came in the hotel. I was on my way to breakfast; he asked me to wait until he washed his hands and he would join me. We talked of the general topics of the day and parted between 10 and 11 o'clock. He went to the Court House and I to the State House.

Just before our session convened some one told me that Daniel Clark was dying. He was sitting at the bar. Judge Miller on the Bench noticed that he was dipping his pen in a glass of water and trying to write. He sent the bailiff to see what was wrong, then hurried for a physician and when he arrived he found Clark beyond human aid. Everything to live for, a man of great promise, courteous and gentlemanly, he was stricken, but such is life.

TABLET UNVEILING.

The arrangements for unveiling the D. A. R. tablet and for the reception at Fort McHenry on the 10th of September have been completed by Mrs. Robert G. Hogan, assisted by the following heads of committees: Mrs. Robert A. Welsh, reception committee, Mrs. Ross Holloway, hospitality; Mrs. Arthur Lee Bosley, program. and Mrs. John F. Sippel, decorations.

The tablet consists of a bronze shield three feet long, showing the profile of Francis Scott Key in bas-relief, mounted on a five by seven foot slab on which an outline of the history of the fort is chiseled. Permission to place it in the wall of the Star Fort at the right of the entrance has been given by the War Department, and a representative of the Government will be present to accept it when it is presented by the State regent and turn it over into the custody of the Mayor of Baltimore.

Mrs. William Cummings Story, the President General of the Daughters of the American Revolution, will give a short talk, and Mrs. Hester Dorsey Richardson, State Historiae, will tell of the part played by the fort in Revolutionary days. His Excellency, the Governor of Maryland, will deliver an address. It is urged that every Daughter in the State make an especial effort to be present for both the ceremonies and the reception without any further invitation.

The time for the unveiling has been set for 3.30 P. M., and the reception which will follow immediately, will be held inside the Star Fort. Invitations are extended to all visiting Daughters, the heads of Patriotic Societies and the city's official guests.

If any Daughters who have relics for the Historical Exhibits Collection and have not yet arranged to send them will, communicate with Mrs. Hogan she will furnish them with lists and information and assist them in any way she can.
