Bostonians to Open Lyceum Festival

FOUR CHARMING AND TALENTED YOUNG LADIES.

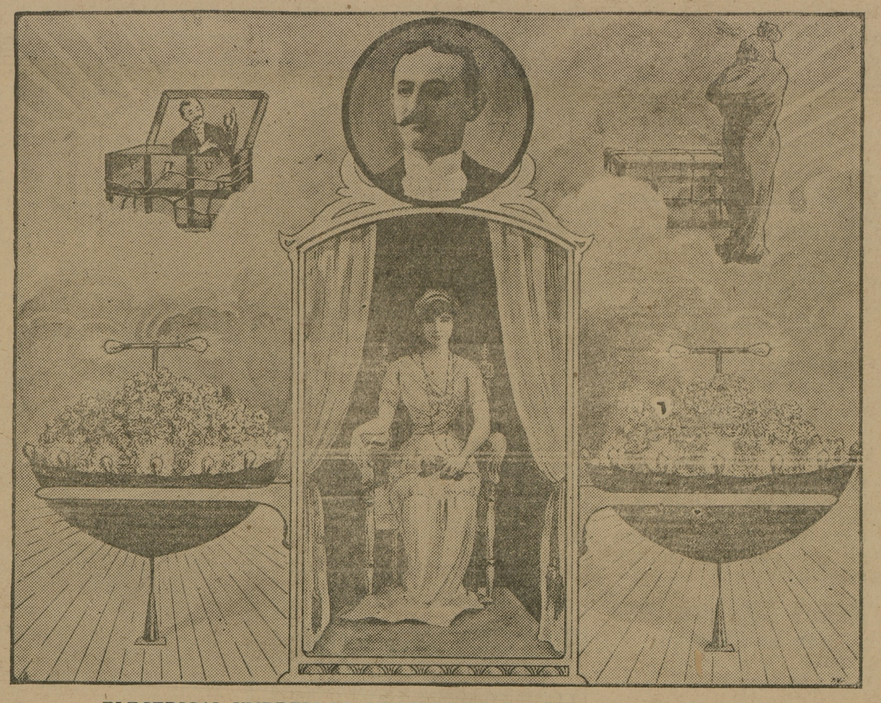

WE are privileged to present in this issue a grouped picture of the Four Bostonians and bits of their work. This company has been chosen to open our Lyceum Festival. The Bostonians are said to be a combination of unusual musical talent, and the fact that they have been assigned to the opening program indicates that the management knows the company thoroughly.

Miss Mary Brooks is the violinist, and she has a reputation of being a master of this instrument. Miss Brooks has what is sometimes referred to as "soul" in her playing, and her music means something to her hearers.

The reader is Miss Jean Fowler, and her work runs the gamut from comedy to tragedy, though her preference is for those things which cheer her audiences.

Miss Ethel Bentley is the soprano of the company. She spent much of her life in Boston, and her marked musical talent was carefully trained in the great conservatories of that cultured city. To these years of training she has now added three seasons of concert singing, the very best test. She has sung at previous festivals under the management that brings her here, and that is significant of her ability. Miss Edith Stetson, the pianist of the Four Bostonians, is an artist, whether she is playing as an accompanist or as a soloist.

Springer and His Marvelous Magic

ELECTRICAL UMBRELLAS, MYSTERIOUS THRONE AND TRUNK TRICK.

We present here an illustration of a few of the marvelous bits of magic performed by Springer, the man who will mystify you on the last evening of the Lyceum Festival. Of course these are only "samples" of his feats, but you will find that they will puzzle you and cause you to wonder if, after all, there is something supernatural about this man. Of course it is all trickery, but the most bewildering trickery imaginable.

The illustration shows, for instance, his great throne illusion. The stage is shown set with the big throne, beside which are two electrical umbrellas. The throne is vacant when first shown, but in the twinkling of an eye a queen is revealed there. Where does she come from? If you can figure it out you are smarter than nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand. One minute the throne is vacant. The next instant the queen sits there. That's all we know about it.

The electrical umbrellas form one of the most beautiful trick effects shown by any magician. At a wave of that wonderful wand the umbrellas are illuminated with many different colored lights and are filled to overflowing with hundreds and hundreds of beautiful roses. The effect is not only mystifying, but is beautiful beyond description.

The Kellar trunk trick that won that world famous magician his greatest renown is also performed by Springer, with the added mystery given by the use of a glass trunk. Apparently everything inside the trunk can be seen by the audience, and yet Springer is handcuffed, padlocked in a big bag and then placed in this trunk, which is roped, but in a moment he comes walking out from some place, and the trunk and bag are found to be empty.

The Springer entertainment is not "an evening for children," but it is a program that will challenge the closest attention and best thought of the adults, although, of course, the children will revel in the delights of the surprises and humor of the evening. In that respect most of us are children. We all like to spend a couple of hours being puzzled and amused.
