IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE IN THE "KENT NEWS"

TUTUILA, THE HAPPY ISLE

Leads the World in Percentage of Sunday School Children—People Live Simple Lives.

The efforts of the Medical department of the United States have practically stamped out "tonas" among the natives of the Island of Tutuila, Samoa.

Surgeons C. F. Ely and John C. Parham of the navy have accomplished wonders. Even the dreaded elephantiasis is decreasing among the natives.

The island of Tutuila, which was ceded by the chief of the Manila group to the United States in 1900, and accepted by the president, has as yet had no appropriation from congress. The duties of naval officers on station at the island are dual, as in addition to performing their regular naval duties, they must act as county officials. Commander J. M. Poyer, U. S. N., recently succeeded Commander C. D. Strams, U. S. N., as commander of the naval station and civil governor of the island.

Children between the ages of six and fourteen must attend school. They are first instructed in their own language, which has only 14 letters in the alphabet, and then they are taught English.

The people are simple and happy. They are Christians, and the island holds the record for the world in the greatest percentage of children attending Sunday school.

The island is about six miles wide and about eighteen miles in length. The population is about 5,000. The $10,000 appropriated by congress and the $2,000 donated by the Red Cross for the relief of the natives after the hurricane that swept the island on January 3, demolishing all of the houses, is being well used. The natives have again planted their crops and rebuilt their homes.

WASHING IS MODERN CUSTOM

Only in Comparatively Recent Times Has the Idea of Cleanliness Become Common.

One must not forget that regular and systematic cleansing of the person is a very modern fashion. As late as the early part of the nineteenth century toothbrushes were not allowed in certain French convents, being looked upon as a luxury.

Cleanliness was not very common a century and a half ago in any country.

In 1770 the publication of Monsieur Perrel's "Pogonotomie, ou l'Art d'apprendre a se raser soi-meme," created a sensation among fashionable people, and enthusiasts studied self-shaving.

The author of Lois de la Galanterie" in 1640 writes: "Every day one should take pains to wash one's hands and one should also wash one's face almost as often!"

The copious streams of hot and cold water, turned into a porcelain tub at any time of the day or night, the brushes and soaps and towels and toilet waters and powders of our day, were quite unknown to our not far-off ancestors.

The oft-repeated and minute ablutions of our day are almost as modern as bicycles, and not as ancient as the railways.

Fighting Quicksand.

In sinking a shaft there are few things that a miner can encounter which are more unwelcome to him than a deep vein of quicksand. That is what has been struck at a Michigan iron mine. In quicksand the ordinary procedure of timbering down as the excavating is done is impossible. In most instances the work must be done in much the same manner as a caisson is sunk. This makes necessary the construction of a casing by bolting together heavy timbers equally about a foot in thickness. At the bottom of each wall of this timbered "chimney" a cutting shoe is trimmed on the inside so as to assist the shaft in sinking under its own weight. All the material beneath the walls of the structure is in this way squeezed, or cut, into the confines of the casing, while the latter gradually sinks as the excavating is carried on. As rapidly as the shaft sinks into the earth additional timbers are bolted in place on top, this operation continuing until rock is encountered.

Tea the Allies' Favorite Drink.

The favorite drink of the French army today, as it is in both the English and Russian armies, is tea. There are many tea canteens along the front, where men can get hot cups of tea on entering and leaving the trenches. Every one of these I have seen has been full, and single canteens sometimes serve 25,000 cups of tea a day.—Arno Dosch in World's Work.

Did Away With Madder.

Alizarin, a dyestuff, was first synthetically produced in 1869, in which year the world production of madder was 110,000,000 pounds of roots, representing 1,100,000 to 1,650,000 pounds of alizarin, worth $11,250,000. In 1870 France had approximately 50,000 acres under madder cultivation, which soon disappeared after the introduction of the artificial product.

Naturally.

"I saw Mabel buying rouge the other day."

"That gives color to the report that she paints."

Precocious Pat.

"Now, Pat, tell the class why words have roots."

"I guess, ma'am, that's the only way the language could grow."
