...MEN TO HOLD BIRD

Penguin of the South Polar Regions Weighs Seventy Pounds and Has Great Strength.

The largest, as well as the rarest, of the penguins, those queer birds of the South Polar regions, was first seen by Captain Cook, the noted navigator.

These strange creatures sometimes weigh as much as seventy-five or eighty pounds, and the muscles covering their breast contribute more than one-third of their entire weight.

A very large specimen was captured and taken on board ship in an expedition to the Antarctic. Standing erect, in the sheen of its plumage, it seemed clothed with gold and purple, and white and black.

Presently it gave an exhibition of its extraordinary strength. One blow of its flipper-like fore limb sent an impertinent dog howling off to nurse his head. Five men were required to secure the penguin, and they succeeded only with great difficulty, one holding to each leg, one to each flipper and one grasping the neck. After being strongly bound, the muscular bird succeeded in breaking loose.

Another indication of the immense strength of the fore limbs, or flippers, of the penguin is the fact that with their aid the birds are able to leap perpendicularly out of the water to a height of three feet or more, landing upright on a cake of ice. They approach close to the edge of the ice before making the leap, and jump directly upward.—Boys' Life Magazine.

BEN JONSON WAS WAR HERO

England's First Poet Laureate Killed His Opponent in View of Two Armies.

Ben Jonson, England's first poet laureate, came from a noble family, his grandfather having been a man of rank and fortune in the service of Henry III. His father, however, suffered persecution in the reign of Bloody Mary, and it was only at her death that he was liberated from prison. Death came to him just a month before the birth of his famous son.

The youth of the poet was full of vicissitude. The trade of bricklaying had been thrust upon him by a stepfather, but disdaining to become a bricklayer, he entered Cambridge at the age of sixteen. Because of lack of funds to carry on his studies he entered the army and performed many heroic deeds in the Low Countries. Once he engaged in single combat and slew his opponent, seized his arms and carried them away in full view of both armies.

When he left the army he became an actor. At the outset of his career on the stage a quarrel with a fellow actor resulted in a duel, in which Ben Jonson killed his opponent. He was overcome with remorse and the deed is said to have colored all his future life. He was thrown into prison and was brought near to the gallows.—Detroit News.

Safety Ahead.

"If the majority of young Americans are like little Robert, this nation need have no fear for its future," said Senator Lodge at a banquet recently, and when asked who little Robert was, told of meeting the little chap at the house of a close friend.

"He was busy trying to make a boat and finally his father asked him, 'Why don't you sit down quietly and try to read one of your books, instead of trying to make that boat?'

"'Cause I don't like to keep reading other people's finks when I want to make my own hands do a fink of their own.'"

Buried Talents.

An old negro, who had since man's memory been a charge on public charity, died the other day in Americus. When a search was made among his belongings in the decrepit old cabin his brother found a deed to some valuable property and a number of currency bills amounting to $1,000. The bills were in $2 and $5 denomination. But they were so badly worn and frayed that they had to be sent to the mint to be redeemed. A repetition of the parable of the man who buried his talent.

Snappy Come-Back.

At a dinner a well-known comedian had finished his speech and, as he sat down, a lawyer arose, thrust his hands into his trousers pockets and inquired: "Doesn't it strike this company as a little unusual that a professional comedian should be funny?"

When the laughter had subsided the comedian drawled out: "Doesn't it strike this company as a little unusual that a lawyer should have his hands in his own pockets?"

First Families of Caveland.

Mr. Skinpants—One of the oldest, Mrs. Sabertooth. The contemporaneous portraits on the walls of our ancestral cave depict all of our family with tails.

Different.

"Is Blondie going to take a day off tomorrow for her birthday?" asked Claudine of the rapid fire restaurant.

"Nope; about six years," replied Heloise, the head waitress.

Not So Good.

"Good news," said the office boy. "I can hear the art editor laughing."

"But that was not a comic drawing," sighed the artist in waiting.

WHERE CENTRAL QUITS AT NIGHT

Continuous Service Exceptional in Australia's State-owned Central Offices.

Continuous telephone service available at any hour of the day or night, every day in the year, is the general practice in the United States, and inability to have such service always at hand would seem extremely inconvenient to the average American. In most foreign countries, however, it is taken for granted, except in the larger cities, that only at certain hours in the daytime is it possible to use the telephone.

In Australia, for example, where the telephones and telegraphs are operated by the Government, less than ten per cent. of the telephone exchanges remain open throughout the night. The other 90 per cent. close in the early evening and their telephones are "cut off," generally, until 9 o'clock the next morning. At these exchanges also telephone service is not regularly given on Sundays; and on public holidays these central offices are open only for an hour or so. At more than 70 per cent. of the total telephone exchanges in Australia not over nine hours of telephone service is rendered even on week days. In fact, at many Australian exchanges service is given for only eight hours a day during the week, and not at all on Sundays.

Not only are Australians, outside the large cities, generally restricted to daytime usage of the telephone, but more than 37 per cent. of the telephone exchanges in the Island Continent shut up shop also in the middle of the day for a "luncheon period" of one hour. If telephone service is desired during this intermission notice must be given to the "officer in charge" and extra "opening fees" must be paid.

In addition, more than 20 per cent. of the Australian exchanges have a "weekly half holiday," closing from 9 A. M. until 1 P. M. one day a week. There are also over 800 central offices at which the hours of service are merely "arranged between 7 A. M. and 11 P. M., according to requirements of subscribers served and local arrangements." In short, the average Australian needs a time-table to tell him when he can use his telephone.

ENGLISH WRITER LAUDS AMERICAN TELEPHONES

Joseph Morris, the English journalist, who is now in this country is a great admirer of the American telephone system, concerning which he says: "Your telephone directory is a ponderous and awe-inspiring volume and shows to what extent you have developed the telephone system both within and without your gates. Here you have made it an everyday necessity, whereas, outside of strict business, we look upon it as a luxury.

"I cannot speak too highly of the service, and an attempt to make a comparison between it and London would be the height of folly. But there our system is government-owned and operated and yours is the result of private enterprise. That speaks a whole lot."

16,000,000 MILES OF WIRE TO RUN THROUGH TUNNEL

World's Deepest Telephone Subway Now Being Bored Beneath New York City Streets.

With subway trains roaring overhead, their passengers unaware of the engineering feat being performed beneath them, the deepest underground channel for telephone cables in the world is being constructed in New York City.

A new group of telephone buildings is being erected on West Thirty-sixth street where some day eight central offices will be in operation, serving the Times Square-Pennsylvania section of the city. Here, two large shafts, each 50 feet deep, were sunk into bedrock on either side of Seventh Avenue, and a cross-town tunnel blasted between, 25 feet beneath the tracks of the Inter-borough subway. When completed, the conduit system will be capable of carrying nearly 350,000 separate telephone wires. It will measure 242,000 duct feet which is sufficient to contain about 16,000,000 miles of telephone wire in cables of 1,200 pairs each. The tunnel itself is eight feet wide and eight feet high, hewn out of solid bedrock 50 feet below the surface.

TELEPHONE "STILL ALARMS" ARE INCREASING RAPIDLY

Fire department records from the larger cities show a great increase in the number of still alarms in the last two years. A still alarm is usually one that is reported over the telephone, and more and more are people becoming accustomed to telephoning their calls for firemen. One reason why so many still alarms are sent in is that people have discovered a quicker route to get word to the firemen than by running out of doors and hunting for the nearest fire alarm box. This does not mean that the fire alarm boxes have outlived their use. They are still considered vital adjuncts to the city fire service, but the increase in the number of calls for fire service that come over the telephone is noteworthy.
