Sheen's Cavalry Is All Right

Minister, World-War Veteran, Organizes Company Of Boys — One Of Ideas Is To Keep Youth On Farm.

At the horse show and farmers' picnic held recently in Centreville one of the features was the evolution of Sheen's Cavalry, which came upon the field without announcement and carried out maneuvers as laid down in the regulation United States Cavalry drill manual.

Sheen's Cavalry came to the show escorting Miss Alberta Brice and Miss Kratzer, two contestants in the horse-judging contest.

The escort was rewarded by seeing both girls get places, and their leader, the Rev. Louis Sheen, take the first prize in the contest.

Sheen's Cavalry is composed of young men of Old St. Paul's parish in South Kent. This embraces the section around Fairlee. The members of the cavalry are boys "off the farm," and once a week they are put through the regulation drill by Mr. Sheen. It is a purely military organization, unattached to any other body. It was organized a year ago by Mr. Sheen to promote the idea of leadership among the boys, and is non-sectarian.

The company now has 32 members, with the two girls participating in their drills.

The requirements to become a member are that the applicant be an owner and a lover of a horse, and to prove that he takes care of the animal.

During the winter Mr. Sheen leads his charges in fox hunting, and he tells of one old fox that seems to enter into the sport of the thing, and keeps just a safe distance ahead of the hounds and horses.

As the people of Kent county are becoming better acquainted with the cavalry, the membership is growing.

The Centreville affair was but the second public appearance, and in that event it successfully policed the course of point-to-point races. After its organization it made its first public appearance in Chestertown, but its numbers were so small that it attracted but little attention. At Centreville it was a feature of the day.

Mr. Sheen was asked, "Why the cavalry?" He said that he came of a military family. In the wars of America his family has been represented. In the World War Mr. Sheen was an officer, but not a chaplain, in the One Hundred and Ninth United States Field Artillery. He appreciated, he said, the value of the training, and in carrying out his idea each member of the company is given the opportunity to have command of it. He said, further, that he felt that the activities of the cavalry would tend to keep the young men on the farm.
