Backed Through Subway Tube

Auto Truck, Too Big to Be Turned Around, Pulls Telephone Cable Through Tunnel Under East River.

Most people who visit New York and ride in the subway trains are unaware of the fact that telephone lines adjoin the tracks over which they are riding. In the old days the telephone trunk lines between the central offices in Brooklyn and Manhattan Island were strung along the Brooklyn Bridge. Later, submarine cables were laid. In recent years, however, additions to the plant have been made in ducts built specially for the purpose in the subway tunnels under the East River.

The new Fourteenth street tunnel under the East River was recently opened for transit, but three years ago, prior to the time when any rails had been laid, four complete telephone cables were installed and were soon in actual service.

A 5-ton motor truck was lowered down the shaft of the Brooklyn end of the tube to the concrete floor or track base of the tunnel, 100 feet below the street surface, into a space measuring 24 feet by 7 feet 6 inches, the truck itself being 22 feet 8 inches by 7 feet 4 inches. It could not be turned around and, in laying the reels, had to make the trip in reverse. As each reel was emptied of its cable, it was necessary to roll the empty reel ahead of the truck to clear the roadway in the tunnel. The complete installation of 13,976 feet of cable was made in five hours and 57 minutes.

ELLIS ISLAND'S NEW AMERICANS KEEP LINE BUSY

Immigration Telephone Booth Overworked With Greetings To Kin Of Aliens.

When the immigrants arrive at Ellis Island, many of them have their first experience with the telephone which plays an important part in informing relatives and friends of the new world arrivals.

Placarded with pink and white tickets, denoting the railroad line they are bound for, oozing strangely shaped bundles all over their persons, with a few small, meek-faced children trudging alongside, the typical immigrant family, having successfully passed their examination, enters the waiting room ready for the fateful moment of their departure into the new world proper. Some of them have never seen a telephone before. Others have rarely used them, but are as eager as children to try. A telephone booth which has stood in this waiting room for many years is the very first to acquaint hundreds of thousands of immigrants with the service of the nationwide Bell System.

Sometimes those who speak no English at all may enlist the aid of one of the government employes to get the telephone connection desired. Soon a rapid-fire of Slavonic rapture buzzes over the telephone wires, evidently informing someone's lost mother's second cousin of their safe arrival. Some of them can speak a little English, not well, but loud, as the telephone operators who handle their calls can testify. Most of them have no idea of geography or distance.

Long distance calls, as might be expected, make up a large percentage of those which go out from Ellis Island for, in addition to the calls sent by the immigrants, the officials of the Island must keep in almost constant touch with the Department of Labor in Washington, in order to consult records or to obtain information.

Long Distance Line Now Links Bombay And Delhi

Delhi, the capital of the Indian Empire, is now connected by long-distance telephone lines with the great commercial port of Bombay. The advantageous position of Bombay on the west coast of India makes it the nearest Indian port to Europe. It is, indeed, a formidable rival to Calcutta as a grateway for Indian foreign trade, and its commercial importance makes it the logical terminus for the long-distance telephone line to Delhi.

The present ambitious plans of the Indian Government for the construction of long-distance telephone lines contemplate a circuit between Bombay and Calcutta, to be completed by the end of 1924, with additonal connections ultimately between Delhi and Calcutta, and between Calcutta and Madras. British India has at present, however, only about as many telephones as Atlanta, Ga. In fact, the great Indian Empire boasts but one telephone for every 10,000 inhabitants.

Nine office buildings in New York city have, in the aggregate, more telephones than the whole of Peru, Ecuador, Colombia and Paraguay combined.

In the whole world there are just twenty-five cities that have over 100,000 telephones apiece. Sixteen of these cities are in the United States.

USES TELEPHONE CALLS TO CATCH FLEEING CROOKS

Michigan Sheriff's System Of Giving Warning Virtually Closes All Roads.

A telephone notification system that virtually closes the main highways as avenues of escape for criminals has been adopted in Wayne county, Mich., and is now being extended throughout southeastern Michigan.

The plan was discussed at a recent conference of county sheriffs, State and federal police officers. The automobile has made it so that the criminal knows no boundary lines and, as a result, law enforcement methods must be revised to meet these changed conditions, declared Sheriff George A. Walters, who has had great success in tracing criminals through the use of the telephone.

This has been accomplished by listing farmers and places of business along all of the main highways in the county, care having been taken to secure the co-operation of persons who are so situated as to be able to see passing automobiles. When a bank robbery or other serious crime is committed in Detroit or in a nearby city or town, the plan is immediately to get in touch with the places that have been listed along the roads that seem likely avenues of flight. Careful descriptions of the fugitives are given and a watch is then kept for them. If they are located, the sheriff's office is immediately called by telephone and arrangements are made to intercept them.

Telephone Operating Trains "Ear Memory"

Telephone operating trains the memory of the ear. The high quality of intelligence which is sought by the telephone company in employing operators is, however, capable of developing so accurate and retentive an ear-memory as to be simply phenomenal. This is illustrated by the instance of a Washington telephone operator who had been with the local telephone company almost from the beginning. In the early 80's, when she first joined the ranks, she worked under the direction of Warren Choate, who died last March at the age of 81. It was not very long after the operator was employed that Mr. Choate severed his connection with the telephone company to go into other business. She had not seen him or heard from him for many years, and when a short time before he died, Mr. Choate had occasion to call her up on the telephone. She did not expect the call and had not heard the voice for 35 years. Yet she instantly recognized it and greeted her early employer by name.
