WASHINGTON PLAYS FINE FOOT BALL BIG GAME HERE TODAY

Having this will be the first meeting of these institutions on the gridiron, the traditional rivalry of years standing should be an ever-present factor in the contest. Loyola is enjoying her second year of college football, the game being started last season under the direction of "Tom" Healey, a Chestertown resident.

The Jesuits have made rapid strides and should be vied with the various State colleges for State honors in the next few years.

Washington College took an expected defeat at the hands of the strong Lafayette team at Easton last Saturday, but nevertheless showed a reversal of form that surprised everyone. It was a fighting team that faced Lafayette's staunch line and it battled the Eastonians every inch of the way. As was predicted the Eastern Showmen used an over-head attack with fair results and brought the ball many times within scoring distance. Washington had twelve first downs, most of which were made through the medium of the forward pass.

Capt. Mike Kelley played a splendid game, breaking up several over-head attacks which Lafayette launched and preventing several touchdowns. His defensive play was an outstanding feature of the game. Kelley is one of the best pivot men in the State and passes the ball with a sureness that makes it easy to understand that he should be one of the outstanding centers in the State this year.

Smoot's great punting against a strong wind brought joy to Coach Kibler, for Washington has not been gaining much territory through this department. He should prove very valuable against Loyola on Saturday.

SHUCKING HOUSES IN KENT GO OUT OF BUSINESS BECAUSE OF STRINGENT LAW

The State Department of Health has passed such stringent rules and regulations governing operation of oyster shucking houses that nearly every small dealer has been driven out of business. John Crouch, of Long Cove, is about the only packer who has tried to comply with the law, and it cost him hundreds of dollars. Quaker Neck, Cliffs, Chestertown and elsewhere are without shucking houses and the familiar cry of George Ringgold "oysters, oysters, oysters" on our streets is heard no more. It seems as if the small dealer is pushed aside. The regulations are the following:

"Every building or room used as a shucking house shall be constructed and equipped as hereinafter provided, and the operations carried on in such building or room shall be conducted in such a manner that the purity and wholesomeness of the shellfish handled therein shall not be impaired. In this respect it is required that employees avoid all unnecessary handling of oysters before and after opening."

"All rooms in which shucked oysters are packed, stored, washed or otherwise handled shall be separate and apart from the rooms in which the oysters are opened."

"There shall be an abundant supply of unpolluted, cold running water and of scalding hot water or steam each under pressure. For sterilizing purposes live steam is highly recommended. All water that comes in contact with the shucked oysters must be drawn direct from the pipe. No dipping, from tubs or other receptacles, of water that is to come in contact with the shucked oyster, is allowed."

"All shucking houses shall be provided with adequate drainage to lead all waste liquids outside of the building and into a suitable sewer or cess-pool, or to some other point where they can be disposed of without creating a nuisance. Waste liquids must not be disposed of by emptying into any stream in which shellfish are grown or floated."

"All dippers, tubs, skimmers, buckets, paddles, blowers, tanks, etc., must be of metal, or of such material and construction that they can be readily cleaned. No apparatus in contact can be of wood. Apparatus must be thoroughly cleaned and scalded at the end of the day's work. Knives of shuckers must be treated likewise. All seams, joints and crevices of utensils, and any such places as harbor bacteria which come in contact with the shucked oyster, must be water-tight and smooth, finished by solder or otherwise."

"All containers in which shucked oysters have been shipped to an oyster packer or distributor must be washed clean by the packer or distributor immediately after emptying and before returning to the shipper."

"Shucked oysters should be washed with clean, unpolluted water. If the tub method is used oysters must not be in contact with the water for a period in excess of fifteen minutes. The washing must be of such a thorough nature that dirt and filth introduced by the openers or during subsequent handling shall be effectively removed. If the blower or any form of mechanical agitation is used to wash the oysters, it must be kept clean, the sediment removed after each blowing, and a fresh supply of clean water used for each blow. The period of blowing shall not be over three minutes, unless salt solution is used, the strength of the solution ranging between 1 per cent and 2 per cent depending upon the salinity of the water in which the oysters were grown. After oysters have been washed and are ready for final packing and shipment, they shall not be touched by the hand. Clean rubber gloves may be used.

"Shucked oysters must be packed in closed containers and thoroughly iced. Oysters must not be packed in contact with ice. They must be shipped the same day as opened unless stored at 45 degrees F. or below, in closed containers and thoroughly iced, or otherwise effectively refrigerated. The covers of cans in which oysters are shipped must be securely sealed by soldering or crimping so as to reach the consignee un-tampered with. Each can must bear impressed in the body of the tin the name of the shipper or a code number assigned by the Department of Health."

"Suitable facilities must be furnished for employees to wash their hands. These shall consist of an abundance of hot water, a sink properly located, soap and paper towels. Employees shall be required to wash their hands before beginning work and after visiting the toilet."

"The outer clothing worn by persons engaged in shucking oysters shall be of material which can be readily cleaned and only clean garments shall be worn. Each shucker shall be required to wear clean rubber apron."

"No person with infected wounds on the hands or arms shall be permitted to open oysters nor handle the same."

"No person afflicted with any communicable disease shall be employed in any shucking house nor shall any person so affected be permitted to enter the rooms of shucking house where oysters are opened, packed or otherwise handled."

"Proper toilet facilities shall be provided for the use of the employees in shucking house, and toilets shall be kept clean to avoid contamination after use."

"Shell oysters when packed for shipment must be in new boxes or barrels. The repeated use of the same boxes and barrels for this purpose is forbidden."

"All employees are to be inspected by medical men approved by the State Department of Health. There are no funds for this service, and it must be borne by the industry."
