A Few Comparisons

In its early days the telephone was regarded by the general public at first as a toy and later as a luxury. Today it is a necessity. Without the telephone American industry and American society, as we know them, could not function efficiently.

And yet the average American spends less than half as much for this indispensable service as he (or she) spends on candy and soft drinks or on cigars and cigarettes. Not only radio and music in general but cosmetics and perfumes are more costly to this average American for he (or in the latter case, she) pays far more for such luxuries than for the indispensable service of the telephone.

And the great American recreation of the movies draws more dollars from our citizens than does the great American system of nation-wide communication.

THEY TRAVEL THE SAME ROAD

The daily newspapers and the public service corporations are "brothers under the skin," according to W. P. Strandborg, in the Industrial News Bureau. Both are public utilities serving the American people with an essential and permanent daily service he says.

Of the two it would be unfair to say which is the more indispensible. The newspapers have a daily circulation of 25,000,000, while the major utilities, light, power, gas and telephone, have contact relations with about 35,000,000 customers.

One thing is sure. It would be a monumental catastrophe if either public utilities or the daily newspaper should discontinue service for a single day. Both have become a vital part in the progress of modern civilization and society.

Last year, it is estimated, public utilities spent approximately $25,000,000 for advertising, of which 63 per cent. was used in the daily newspapers.

TRANSPORTATION AND COMMUNICATION ARE IMPORTANT FACTORS IN DAIRYING, NATION'S MOST VITAL SINGLE INDUSTRY

Growing children require pure milk. The modern housewife uses the telephone to bring dairy products and other foodstuffs to her doorstep. "Contented cows" on the Charles Wertheimer dairy farm, Frederick County, Md.

House wives everywhere are calling for more milk and the cows are nobly responding to the emergency.

The consumption of milk in all of its forms has increased about 25 per cent. in the past seven years. One hundred and fourteen billion pounds of milk—either as milk or milk products—were consumed in the United States in 1924 as compared with eighty-six billion pounds in 1918. This means an increased consumption of twenty-eight billion pounds of milk, the production of which would require six and one-half million of our average dairy cows. In the same period, however, the number of cows in the United States only increased a little more than two million. Increased consumption in the seven-year period was greater by three times than the increase in the number of cows, indicating that the cows are showing greater efficiency.

The dairy industry in the United States is the greatest and most vital single industry in the world. The value of dairy products last year, according to Charles W. Larson, chief of the Bureau of Dairy Industry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture in an address before the Kiwanis Club of Washington recently, amounted to $2,500,000,000.

But the importance of the industry is not so much in its size or in the amount of money derived from it as is its importance to the health of the people. The position that dairy products hold in the nourishment of the people of this country is indicated by a survey made by the U. S. Department of Agriculture of the diet of the average family in this country. An analysis of the results of this survey shows that more than one-fifth of the money spent for food was used for dairy products with about two-thirds of this amount for milk and one-third for butter. Other dairy products take a relatively small place in the total costs of food for the family.

Of course, the very life of the dairy industry is dependent upon efficient distribution, and the two most important factors of this are transportation and communication. Nothing has done more to bring about the increased production in the marketing of dairy products than improved roads and the telephone. The good road system of every community have made it possible for the dairyman to transport his produce to the community more quickly and efficiently than in the past. With the telephone he is able to keep in touch with his patrons and supply on demand the products required, or in case he is unable to furnish a sufficient quantity, he can get in touch with other dairymen in his community who will be able to make up the quantity required.

The telephone in the dairy industry is necessary as in every other business. It is an important link in the communication system of every community. The dairyman not only depends on the telephone to sell his produce, but uses it daily in ordering supplies for the dairy farm and in the repairs and upkeep of his plant. Where fleets of motor trucks are used to distribute milk and anything goes wrong with the mechanical apparatus a telephone is used as a dispatching system to straighten out the emergency and provide the necessary equipment to keep the consignment moving so that it may be delivered to the consumer in time for his morning meal.

The modern home of today is not complete without telephone service. The housewife uses it in innumerable ways not only to supply the wants of the larder but in her social affairs as well. With the younger members of the family it is used with equal fidelity to make dates and break dates, depending on the occasion.
