Kent News

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1927

This is the woman's age. Now then the Wicomico Board of County Commissioners has appointed Mrs. Rachel Morris to the newly created position of clerk to the Board. She had recently served in the Treasurer's office.

By a vote of 18 to 1 the Baltimore City Council Monday killed the day light saving ordinance introduced by Wm. G. Albrecht, of the Fifth district, by adopting the unfavorable report on the bill returned by the Committee on Legislation. Mr. Albrecht was the only Councilman to vote for the measure.

A WONDERFUL YOUNG MAN

The News editors love boys. We believe in the youth of this age. Nothing has so encouraged this confidence as the coming on the stage of that attractive and modest young aviator, Col. Charles Lindbergh. His example in the things worth while will mean untold benefit to the youth of our county. It is his character and manly conduct which has won the world's praise as much as the feat he accomplished.

The plain fact is that Lindbergh is almost unbelievable. His whole exploit has almost an air of unreality about it. If some novelist had tried to write a fantastic story about a sort of conglomeration of the best features of every popular idol we have ever had, he would have turned out a tale and a central figure less satisfying than what Lindbergh has given us.

To begin with, there was the flight itself. It was epic, breath-taking. It made him the most talked-of man in the world.

But that was only the starter. It was after he arrived in Paris that he really began to win our hearts.

The more we read about him the better we like him. He has not made one false move—and he has been in a situation where he might well have been excused for making many. His personality has not revealed a single angle that is not likeable and admirable—and he has been placed where all sides of his makeup have been revealed to the world. He has not grown swell-headed—this boy of 25 who has become, over night, the earth's most famous figure. He has not lost his poise.

Consider him. He lands at Paris after a gruelling, nerve-and-body-racking trip. What does he say? Does he emit some stock phrase, some theatrical remark that would look well in the papers? He does not. He says, like a happy youngster, "So this is Paris—and we made it!"

Paris goes mad over him and he retains his modesty. With the highest officials of the French government waiting eagerly to honor him he bashfully suggests to Ambassador Herrick that he has, fortunately, letters of introduction to them. He is entertained by the leading Americans in Paris and eulogized to the skies—and, like a 10-year old kid, he asks the ambassador if he may have another bit of French pastry. His first thought is of his mother—yet he does not capitalize on his filial affection, nor does he issue a lot of froth about "doing it all for my dear mother."

Women seek to kiss him and he blushes and ducks. Champagne is offered him—and he refrains. A Broadway impressario offers him $60,000 to lecture in six English cities, and he remarks, "My mother expects me home." American magnates beg him to appear on the stage and in the movies and thus become a millionaire. He declines, saying, "I would hate to think of people paying money to see me dance."

In short, this lad is just about ideal—just about perfect. And yet, to save him from any taint of sissy-ness or mamas-boy-ishness, there, is always the memory of that amazing, courageous flight across the Atlantic alone.

This country, gave him a marvelous reception. He has recemented our friendship with France, which, if you stop to think about it, is no unimportant item. He has made all of Europe feel more kindly toward us. And, best of all, he has given all of us, young and old, a new idol—an idol that we can adore whole-heartedly, an idol without a single flaw.

Then there is the mother, acting only as the mother of such a wondreful man would be expected to conduct herself. She is a typical American mother whose every act will be told in story and song to the coming generations.

The News is glad to pay this humble tribute to Col. Lindbergh and his mother and trust that the youth of this age will be encouraged in clean living, modest behavior and manly courage.

TO TOUR EASTERN SHORE

About 117 members of the Maryland Legislature will tour the Eastern Shore next week as guests of the Shore counties. At Chestertown Thursday morning they will be entertained on the lawn of Mrs. H. H. Barroll and Senator S. Scott Beck will have charge of the party while here.

They will visit Conowingo on Thursday, June 23rd. They will simply pass thru Chestertown and will spend the night at Salisbury. It is expected that the party will number about 150. They will spend three days on the Peninsula visiting various points of interest. The News on behalf of Chestertown and Kent county bid these distinguished gentlemen a hearty welcome. The beautiful roses blooming in our gardens send their sweet fragrance to you. The waving wheat fields greet you while all nature is looking its best to hail you.
