AGRICULTURAL WORK OFFERS GOOD FIELD

Farm Industries Present Many Opportunities For Attractive Positions

LEADERS ARE NEEDED IN MANY SPECIALTIES

Young Men Would Do Well To Fit Themselves For Big Jobs Of The Future, Says President Pearson Of U. Of M.

DR. RAYMOND A. PEARSON
President University Of Maryland

"Agriculture offers one of the most satisfactory and lucrative fields which the young man entering college may take up," according to Dr. R. A. Pearson, President of the University of Maryland. "Not only are the positions open to graduates of colleges of Agriculture attractive, but the incomes from such positions are higher than the average salaries to graduates. Salaries to graduates in agriculture range from $1,200 to $2,750 for those just graduated to as high as $20,000 per year for those who have exceptional ability backed by experience. One man in Maryland is receiving a salary of $20,000 a year as head of one of the agricultural organizations."

"Not only is work along agricultural lines attractive, economically," continued Dr. Pearson, "But it is an exceptional field in which to work because of the opportunity it offers to play an important part in the building of community life. Agriculture is the backbone of the world's industry because it gives to workers in all industries the foods that enable them to render efficient service. It is not often that it is possible for one to get an education which practically insures a good paying position and at the same time keeps one in a line of work so vitally associated with the building of better communities and more contented homes."

"Agriculture not only trains the boy for efficiency in the general problems of productive farming but also in the fundamental arts and sciences necessary to fit him for such a diversified field. The graduate of the college of Agriculture may find an outlet for his knowledge in some specialized production such as dairying. Perhaps he may ally himself with some of the great distributing, marketing, or manufacturing agencies that handle farm products. Possibly he may go into research and delve into the mysteries by which the forces of nature build the plant and animal life necessary to sustain human life. The personal interest and abilities of the boy himself usually determine his choice of the particular specialty he desires to enter."

It is Dr. Pearson's opinion that the unfortunate condition that prevailed in Agriculture for some time after the war rapidly is changing and that people engaged in agricultural pursuits are entering upon a much more prosperous era. "The hard times in agriculture following the war reflected considerably in the number of students entering agricultural courses in the universities with the consequent result that the colleges of Agriculture actually are not graduating as many men trained in the particular specialties as the industry needs," says Dr. Pearson, "and it is extremely doubtful if for several years there will be enough graduates to fill replacement needs in agricultural production and in the agricultural industries. Certain it is that no other industry is in greater need at this time of men who are big, broad-gauged and capable, and as the population of the world greatly increases the problems of distributing and marketing of foodstuffs consequently becomes more difficult, the manufacturing of foods in concentrated forms more necessary."

It is the opinion of many men interested in agricultural industries that the comparative value of the purchasing power of the farm dollar is rapidly increasing and when it reaches the point where it will be worth 100 cents in the purchasing of other commodities, then agriculture will be relatively as prosperous as other lines of work. Many of the men most prominently identified with agriculture think cooperation and organization in production and distribution of farm products will advance with great strides but that one of the great needs is to train men for the types of leadership that must be obtained if these organization efforts are to meet with permanent success.

Baptismal Superstition

According to an old English superstition, says the Dearborn Independent, when children of different sexes were brought to the font at the same time the boy must precede the girl; otherwise she was in danger of having a beard when she grew up.

Macerated Currency

After money is macerated in the United States treasury the pulp is made into sheets by the bureau of engraving and printing and is sold to the highest bidder. It used to be that one would see a great many souvenirs made from this pulp. Nowadays this is not done to such an extent.
