THIS NURSE NOW HAS GOOD HEALTH

Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for some time and I would not be without it in the house. As I am a children's nurse, I have to be on my feet a great deal and your medicine has helped me wonderfully. I was hardly able to do my housework when I began taking it, and now I am a strong and well woman, able to do all that and go out nursing besides. I have also used the Sanative Wash and found it beneficial."—Mrs. Gertrude L. Stewart, 103 Davis St., Greenfield, Mass.

Valuable for Weakness

"I have found Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a valuable medicine for weakness."—Mrs. J. A. Pietsch, Box 397, Lancaster, Pa.

Hundreds of letters like these are received by the Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Grateful women from Pennsylvania to Washington, from Texas to Illinois and from Rhode Island to Nebraska say that their health has improved since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Made a Winning Fight

CONSTANCE LATTIMER, actress, was quite certain she was a victim of conspiracy.

"It's my good looks," she told herself. "They are jealous and the managers side in. That is why I have never been given a real part." She stamped her small foot, tilted her chin and resolved that she would go on trying until some day her friends, the real friends, the people across the footlights, would give her such a salvo of applause as would rout jealousies and force the tardy recognition.

It was a brave resolution, but back in the head of the pretty actress was born a tiny doubt. Could it be that her only appeal on the stage was that of beauty? Were they right, those managers, who said she could not act?

As the questions persisted she worked the harder saying to herself that for one triumph she would give up the stage and the career which had beckoned. But she must first have that triumph. Then came Capt. Donald Trall in his handsome uniform and with his pleasing ways, and the problem became the more difficult.

"I cannot marry you, Donald," she said, "because it would be to surrender right now when the battle is at a crisis. You are soldier enough to understand. You see, I wish to prove to myself that I can act, to show that my efforts and dreams have not been in vain. If I stop trying, to be married, I will never know whether I could have succeeded." She looked at him wistfully. "You understand, don't you, and maybe it won't be long before I make good."

"And then?" asked the captain.

Constance sighed and a hopeful look came into her eyes. "And then I will quit the stage forever. I'm tired of it, tired of walking about in pretty clothes, repeating foolish lines, when I might be making ginger cookies in my own kitchen and for, for my own husband. Oh, Don, I hope I succeed but, until then, we can't talk about it any more."

With a double incentive the girl put still more of her energies into the task of acting. Perhaps she tried too hard, strove too eagerly, and her very anxiety defeated its purpose. She remained the same dependable member of the cast, attracting little comment favorable or other. In the company the beginners may have envied her. The older ones shook their heads and remarked that it was strange that a girl with her beauty and promise had never really arrived.

"There is something, just that little something which we would give the world to discover, that is holding her back."

There came a chance to Constance, not a great one but a part of some few more possibilities than those which had gone before. The girl put strength and brain into the rehearsals, shutting Donald and her dreams of love out of her mind. She must make good and then—she would quit with the applause ringing in her ears! She would show them, she would show Donald, and, better than all, she would show herself.

A thoughtful manager stood in the wings on the evening of the dress rehearsal. The same lack, he thought, was present in her work.

"Serves me right," he grumbled, "for thinking she could do it. I will have to find another to take her place when we move on to the big season in New York." All evening he studied her. "And yet if she could just shake out of it, just to find that flaw and hide it, she would go over big."

The opening night came and with it a cool and determined Constance fighting the greatest battle of her career. Donald was down in front and some critics from the city were there. Somehow she did not care. She wanted to win the applause of the people of the town, the ones who had paid their money to get in and who made up a part of the great American audience.

At the end of her first scene she was almost frightened when she heard them clapping and it did not seem possible that it could be for her. Then she took her first curtain call bewildered at the enthusiasm she evoked. Now she was entering the spirit of the play as she had never thought she could. She was playing to people who liked her and the applause increased.

"Donald!" she ran to her lover when the curtain had gone down on the last of many calls, "I've made good, made good at last and we'll have that house, and—and those ginger cookies!"

And Capt. Donald Trall thanked his lucky stars and the sixty men in his company who, at his command, had applauded so bravely in various parts of the house.
