53 TONGUES, CITY OF 10,000

Rock Springs, Wyo., a city of 10,000 inhabitants in the southwestern part of the State, vies with the metropilitan cities of the United States for the crown of being the most polyglot community of America.

Rock Springs is one of the largest coal camps of the Rocky Mountain region, and among the miners employed are found representatives of almost every nation of the globe.

Fifty-three languages are spoken by the residents of the city, and many years ago it became apparent that strenuous efforts were in order to cause Rock Springs to become an integral part of the "melting pot" and not remain a hodge-podge of clannishness and factionalism.

Seven years ago the State of Wyoming and the school authorities of Rock Springs founded a night school course for the foreigners employed in the mines, says word from that city to the New York Herald-Tribune, and it was impressed on the miners that it would be to their advantage to become pupils in this school.

That the advice was heeded is attested by the fact that to date more than 900 men and women have graduated and have become fluent speakers and readers of the English language, and the element which once made the city a vertiable Babel of tongues has in great measure been eliminated.

Most of the patrons of the school are declared to rush fo rtheir first citizenship papers as soon as they arrive from other shores, and for that reason civics is the principal study taken, but English is also one of the main features of the preparatory course. Many of the students take English for two or three years after being admitted to citizenship.

KENT BOY MAY LOSE ARM

As a result of the accidental discharge of a shotgun at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Leager, near here, Phillip Leager is in Easton Hospital with a bad wound in the arm which may necessitate its amputation to save his life.

Leaguer's parents were attending Timonium Fair at the time the accident occurred and there was no one at home except the cook. In passing out of the front door after eating his dinner the gun was knocked down and discharged.

Jack Rabbit Forced to Succumb to Auto

A western physician returning from a professional call across the country stirred up a jack rabbit, says the Evansville Journal. The animal trotted along in front of the physician's car undisturbed apparently while it was traveling 25 miles an hour. Here was a sporting chance to try out the runner made famous by Mark Twain. The physician speeded his car from 25 to 30 miles, and then to 35. The rabbit held its place in the road apparently enjoying the race at that pace. Then the doctor turned on the gas to a speed of 40 miles an hour. The rabbit held the road until it sensed the car was gaining upon it and then loped off into the brush at the side of the road. Thus it appears that the unknown speed of the famous animal has been established. Many a good hound dog has run itself almost to death in pursuit of a jack rabbit before it would give up the chase. Even the greyhound has never been able to carry on with a jack rabbit. It has taken an automobile to drive the jack from the field in a race for speed. No doubt the jack is wondering what sort of a dog has come into its field to defeat it in a trial of speed.

Gospel in Form That Appeals to Tibetans

Tibetan printed books are printed from wooden blocks on very fine buff-colored paper manufactured in the country from the bark of a certain shrub. The pages are long and narrow. They are not bound into a volume, but lie loosely one above another. When not in use the leaves are inclosed in two wooden slabs, which are often finely carved, and tied with silk ribbons. The whole is wrapped in a beautifully embroidered silk cover. The sacred books of Tibet, produced in this way, are regarded with the greatest reverence. A lady missionary working on the borders of Tibet suggested to the British and Foreign Bible society that a part of the New Testament should be produced in Tibetan style. "This," reports the society, "has now been done. St. Mark has assumed a dress which will make a strong appeal to the Tibetans. They will be led from the attractive appearance to the contents, which are still more attractive, and we hope that many of them will be led to the Lord himself."

The Willow Does

A Vancouver writer attempts to answer the question, "Do animals weep?" Certain poets describe a stag as doing so, but when pinned down they admit they have never seen a stag, either weeping or laughing. Virgil describes a horse that wept behind its master's bier, but at a time long antedating that at which the writer lived. In short, there is no trustworthy evidence of the phenomenon. The weeping of animals would be improbable, if only because they do not comprehend what human beings are, and what they are doing, well enough to grieve about it. The case of the crocodile is different. It might very reasonably break down and cry every time it realizes it is a crocodile.

Sorry for "Fatted Calf"

Christian missionaries in their work among the Hindus find it difficult to explain the killing of the fatted calf—the only thing in the four Gospels to which nearly all Hindus take exception. This is because the cow is regarded by them as sacred.

Use for Colored Balloons

Colored balloons are regularly released by the weather bureau in Seattle, Wash., to determine the velocity and direction of the wind at various levels, thus aiding air pilots.
