MRS. BASSETT ALWAYS TIRED

Now in Good Health by Using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lansing, Michigan.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound whenever I needed it. When I first used it I was so bad I could hardly walk across the room without crying. I was tired all the time. I think my trouble was coming on me for six months before I realized it. I read of your wonderful medicine in the paper, and * * * my husband bought me a bottle, and after the first few doses I felt better, so kept on taking it until I was well and strong. I take it at times when I feel tired and it helps me. I will always have a good word for your medicine and tell anyone what good it has done me. I recommended it to my neighbor for her girl, who is sixteen years old, and it was just what she needed. She is feeling fine now, and goes to school every day."—Mrs. E. F. Bassett, 216 South Hayford Avenue, Lansing, Michigan.

Do not continue to feel all run-down and half sick when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is sold by druggists everywhere. It is a root and herb medicine and has been used by women for over fifty years.

STONE MESSAGES WRITTEN IN 1606 MAKE INTERESTING READING TODAY

Old Spanish Inscriptions Were In Reality Signboards Of Early Settlers Of Country

(By Edwin F. Hill)

Inscription Rock located on the National Old Trails highway near Wingate, New Mexico, is a monument to the communication system of an almost forgotten age. This rock on a mountain towering some 7,000 feet above sea level, was the signboard of the old Spanish grandees who settled that part of the country more than 300 years ago.

When the old Spanish dons located a new territory they took it over in its entirety. Many of them owned grants of immense acreages—vast territories more than they could ever hope to use. When these early Spanish settlers undertook to see their domain they needed to establish some means of communication with those who might follow in their footsteps. Someone originated the idea of inscriptions on the rock walls of the mountain side, so that all who came might read.

Inscription Rock near Wingate, which is now a national monument bears decipherable writings dating back to 1606. A translation of one of these Spanish inscriptions reads: "The brother of the Bishop of Darango arrived here September 28, 1737, and on the following day went to Zuni."

Writing messages on stone first came into use long before the Christian era, so this system of communication was not new. Those who first settled America, in utilizing this idea were simply following an old and established custom. The people who settled in the new world used the transportation and communication systems that they had been used to, and very little improvement was brought about in these two very important factors until the development of America.

Young America was an immense territory with settlements springing up in various sections at remote distances from each other. The very remoteness of these settlements made it necessary that there be some ready means of transportation and communication as a means of self protection for all.

The first of the overland transportation methods were the ox drawn wagons of the early pioneers. Communications were sent by messenger or entrusted to the care of those in charge of the wagon trains. The next step were the stages which carried both mail and passengers leaving the slower conveyances to handle freight. As an improvement on the stage coach for delivering messages, the pony express was originated. As the railroad was an outstanding improvement over the wagon train so was the telegraph an improvement over the stage coach and the pony express.

The telegraph, invented by Samuel F. B. Morse, was first used between Baltimore and Washington, May 24, 1844. With the construction of telegraph lines messages were transmitted quickly over great distances, but it was not until 1876 that there came into use a direct person-to-person communication system that made it possible for two people in widely separated places to carry on a conversation as if in the same room.

From two telephones first used on March 10, 1876, has come the immense communication system of 20,000 central offices connecting 18,150,000 telephones by a network of wires covering every section of the country. Telephone users now make about 72,000,000 calls daily in this country. The telephone has not only grown with the United States, but undoubtedly has done much to help the United States to grow. This instrument of service is a far cry from the inscription rocks of the seventeenth century, but it is well to remember that the world was not built in a day.

Big Enough

The value of motor trucks in saving sheep from starving by transporting them from drought areas to green pastures was demonstrated during the recent dry period in Australia, the department of commerce at Melbourne announced recently. More than 10,000 sheep were moved 220 miles by trucks.
