FARMERS OF 3 COUNTIES MEET

Mrs. Isaac Dixon Tuesday entertained the farmers and their wives of Talbot, Queen Anne's and Kent counties at an all-day meeting in the interest of agriculture and turkey raising at her home, "Bloomfield" on the Tred Avon river near Easton.

Mrs. Dixon's spacions lawn was packed with automobiles. It was estimated that between three and four hundred farmers and their wives were present, together with a large number of the leading citizens of Talbot county not actively engaged in farming.

At noon Mrs. Dixon entertained her guests with a bountiful luncheon, consisting of steamed oysters and all that went with them. At one o'clock a farmer's meeting was held. County Agent R. S. Brown, of Talbot county, presided. The guests were welcomed by Mrs. Dixon.

The first speaker was M. M. Stewart, of Baltimore, secretary of the Maryland State Farm Bureau Federation, who urged farmers, for their own interest, to join the local bureau in their county. He was followed by Mrs. Harry Williams, of Kent county, chairman of the Home and Community Committee of the Maryland Farm Bureau Federation, who told how Californians raise chickens for a profit. She said that the farmers of Maryland and the Del-Mar-Va Peninsula could raise them in the same way and get as good, if not better, profits if they would pay more attention to the culling of their flocks for good egg producers. Mrs. P. A. Mathews, of Washington, D. C., spoke on the marketing of farm products by parcel post as one of the means of getting better prices for their eggs butter, poultry and all kinds of farm produce, thus cutting out the profits of the middle man.

H. B. Derrick, county agent for Kent county, and W. G. Smyth, secretary of the Kent County Farm Bureau, spoke also.

Mrs. Dixon was given a rising vote of thanks for her interest and the royal entertainment she tendered the farmers and their wives.

BIG LOCAL SHOW

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Chestertown Volunteer Fire Company are going to stage "Nic-Nacs of 1927" at the Lyceum Theatre on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights, November 28, 29, 30.

"Nic-Nacs of 1927" is a big minstrel musical revue, featuring an up to the minute lady minstrel scene and several other big novelty numbers. The cast will include, besides a large number of Chestertown's best lady entertainers. Mrs. H. J. Wheeler, of the Wheeler Producing Company, who are staging the revue, and her sister, Mrs. Mary C. Saville, of Wilmington, Del. Male minstrel shows are quite common, but lady minstrels, in which our best lady entertainers don male attire and appear as black face singers, dancers and comedians should prove quite a novelty.

The Ladies' Auxiliary are taking this means to raise some funds, and feel that they will have the hearty cooperation of Chestertown and vicinity.

STUDENT BODY VOTES TO DONATE $1000 TO NEW STAND

At a meeting of the entire student body on Thursday, October 20, it was voted to raise $1000 for the purpose of starting a fund to build a new stand for the athletic field. SOPHS WIN TUG-O-WAR!

The annual Washington College tug-of-war between the Soph and and Fresh classes took place on Monday afternoon at Brooks' Mill, near Chestertown. Sixteen husky Freshmen boys were dragged through a stream of water, mud and dirt and were humiliated in the presence of nearly the whole school and outside spectators. Coach Tom Kibler refereed the affair which was fairly contested on both sides.

"The Bat," that famous mystery story play by Mary Roberts Rhinehart has been transferred to the screen and will be shown at the Lyceum Monday and Tuesday of next week. As a play it ran for over two years in New York and over one year in Chicago. 2,000,000 people saw the play in these two cities alons. And the screen production is said to be even better than the play.

CRISIS REACHED IN PROPOSAL TO BRIDGE BAY

Due to a deadlock over the size of draw necessary to permit the passage of barges, the Chesapeake Bay bridge project has reached what is regarded as the most critical stage of its development.

It is almost certain that the plans now on file for the bridge will not receive approval of the War Department engineer here unless modifications are made. Any material change in the plans will necessitate a second hearing, Major C. R. Pettis, War Department harbor engineer for this district, said Monday.

In an effort to end the deadlock over the size of draw, Stuart S. Janney, a director of the bridge company, with a group of Baltimore navigators, conferred informally with Major Pettis on Monday.

While Major Pettis did not say definitely what effect the testimony given by these navigators had on any opinion he had formed in regard to the bridge, he intimated that he was yet to be convinced that the present plans were feasible.

The original plans for the bridge contemplated two draws, one 165 feet long over the west channel and another 210 feet long over the east channel. After the hearing in September the bridge company agreed to increase the length of the west draw to 210 feet and to increase the clearance of both draws when closed from thirty-five to forty-five feet.

These proposed changes met the objections of steamboat companies, but the barge owners declined to withdraw their protests. It is the contention of these opponents that there should be no bridge across the bay and that the most that should be permitted are four 1,000-foot spans over the two channels.

In their argument to substantiate the necessity for the 1,000-foot spans the barge owners contended that in stormy weather or in high winds a tow of four or five barges following a tug is swung across the stream and that it would be impossible to take more than one or two barges through a 200-foot draw at one time.

The navigators who appeared before Major Pettis asserted that a 300-foot draw would be of sufficient size to permit the safe passage of a line of five barges behind a tug.

One of the pilots under cross-examination by Major Pettis said that during a wind with a velocity of 40 miles an hour a clearance of 1,000 feet probably would be necessary.

High winds are unusual in the vicinity of the proposed bridge, the sponsors contended, and they produced a chart to show that from 1873 to 1925 a 60 miles an hour and of 70 miles an hour only once in that period.

The bridge sponsors, it is understood, are willing to increase the size of the draws to 300 feet to give barge and lighter lines what the sponsors consider ample space for passage.

But they say the cost of erecting four 1000-foot spans across the bay would be so prohibitive that the project will be abandoned if such construction is the alternative.

Major Pettis would not say Monday whether he would consider a change in the width of the draws to 300 feet of such material importance as to require a second hearing.

The only action that Major Pettis can take is to make a recommendation to the divisional harbor engineer in New York. This official reviews the recommendation and reason for it and submits the whole matter for the consideration of Maj.-Gen. Edward Jadwin, Chief Engineer of the War Department.

General Jadwin has the right to approve or reverse the recommendation of the engineer in charge of the Baltimore district.

In an effort to meet, as far as possible, the objection of owners of barge lines to the proposed Chesapeake Bay bridge, plans are being prepared for a set span with a horizontal clearance of 300 feet and a vertical clearance of fifty feet, it was announced Wednesday by the bridge company. This will be in addition to two draws with horizontal clearance of 210 feet each.

It is understood this revision of the plans now before Major C. R. Pettis War Department engineer in charge of the Baltimore district, will meet the objections of virtually all shipping interests of the city.

Whether it will satisfy the Philadelphia interests which have taken the lead in opposing the bridge is not known. It was the Philadelphia opponents of the bridge who opposed the spans to be built over the two channels of the bay. The bridge promoters have pronounced this proposal "impossible and unnecessary."

Asked whether he attached any significance to the opposition of the Philadelphia shipping interests, since one of the results of erection of the bridge would be to divert trade from Philadelphia to Baltimore, Major Pettis said:

"I believe that the Philadelphia shippers are sincere. Baltimore interests are not opposing the bridge as strongly as the Philadelphians because of the benefit the bridge will be to Baltimore.

"If this bridge seriously interferes with the business of Philadelphia shipping interests, they will lose, without anything to compensate them. The Baltimore shipper can afford to take a shipping loss which will be compensated by increased trade from the Eastern Shore and increased real estate values both on this and the far side of the bay."

Major Pettis explained that if the present plans before him were revised he would hold a second hearing. He already has intimated that the plans before him cannot be approved by him.

The revised plans of the bridge company will not be ready for several days.
