THE UNIVERSITY OF BALTIMORE

Founded less than three years ago, the University of Baltimore is today an important educational institution. From its very inception the university attracted to its faculty and board of trustees some of the ablest educators and prominent professional and business men in the State. It has stressed practical professional training of a high order and has met with a gratifying response on the part of intelligent men and women seeking such training.

The founding of the University is in itself an interesting chapter in the educational history of both the city of Baltimore and the State of Maryland. With Johns Hopkins University contemplating the abandonment of undergraduate instruction and other educational facilities being either non-existent or woefully inadequate, a pronounced demand arose for a University that would provide standard undergraduate and professional instruction to men and women.

In September 1925, two divisions of instruction were formed — the School of Law and the School of Business Administration. The enrollment in both departments proved that an existing want was met.

In September 1926 a Day Division was added, offering work in both Academic and Business subjects. The enrollment in the Day School was encouraging and gives promise of a very large day student-body in the near future. But, it is the faculty—after all is said, before everything else, that makes an educational institution. Judge Charles W. Heuisler is the Dean of the Law School. He is assisted by Eugene A. Padgett. Other members of the law faculty, well known in the legal life of the State of Maryland, are Rowland K. Adams, Wendell D. Allen, George M. Brady, Dr. Edgar T. Fell, William H. Lawrence, Clarence W. Miles, William Milnes Maloy, Judge Walter W. Preston, James Harry Preston, Judge Albert S. J. Owens, J. Purdon Wright, T. C. Waters, and Roger B. Williams.

The School of Business is headed by Dr. Wilbur F. Smith, who is also President of the University. Dr. Smith was, for many years, Principal of the Baltimore City College. His staff of instructors includes among others, Executive Dean, Howell A. King; Professor N. Bryllion Fagin, Professor Alton R. Hodgkins, R. Loran Langsdale, Dr. Stuart Lewis, Dr. P. Lewis Kaye, Professor William H. Wilhelm, Dr. Frederick Juchhoff and Professor Victor Ray Jones.

That the University of Baltimore is an important addition to the educational facilities of the State is beyond question.
