Our Responsibility and Our Obligation

"The American Telephone and Telegraph Company accepts its responsibility for a nation-wide telephone service as a public trust. Its duty is to provide the American public with adequate, dependable and satisfactory telephone service at a reasonable cost."

WALTER S. GIFFORD,
President of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company
(Bell System)

¶ This expresses the policy which has guided the Bell System from its beginning. By a strict adherence to it there has been created a great, nation-wide system of communication which has placed every city, town and hamlet in the United States within reach of every other city, town and hamlet.

¶ Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor, more than fifty years ago when the telephone was in its infancy, made the prophecy that such a nation-wide system would some day become a reality. It has become a reality, because from the very beginning of the industry down to the present time the management has continuously worked with this objective ever in mind.

¶ The very nature of the telephone business necessitates a single interconnected system. It is, therefore, without competition in the usual sense. This in itself imposes an exceptional responsibility and obligation, amounting to a public trust. Speculative profits have had no place in its development. Always the management has had before it the ideal of rendering a service as nearly perfect as possible, at rates as low as would be consistent with financial safety—thus to encourage the most wide-spread use of the service throughout the nation.

¶ The result is that today the United States, with only 6 per cent of the population of the world, has 60 per cent of the world's telephones. And at no time in the history of the industry has greater progress been made in the development of the telephone art than is being made at the present time.
