BUSINESS OF COOPERATION

Liberty of thought and action is the basis of all freedom. Whatever tends to direct the legitimate activities of the people in arbitrary manner meets with resistance. Within the limits of mortality and in the bounds of reason, it is the thing a man wants to do, plus the untrammeled right to do it, that determines whether or not he is enjoying his natural freedom. And while the exercise of choice is a dear privilege, the method of action may be criticized.

Organized effort, whether in religion, politics, education, government, business or social relationships requires the undivided attention of the people, the unhampered forces of finance, and the uninterrupted execution of the plans necessary for accomplishment. An organization prospers and renders good service in proportion to the ability of the faithful to increase the strength of the group.

There are comparatively few people who are able either financially or in point of time to make a great many interests their principal objects of devotion. But nearly every citizen can have at least one major purpose for the advancement of the community welfare. Some can give counsel and advise. All can care.

Every citizen should find his or her place of best help and then strive to fill it. If the place is in the home, or the church, the club, the lodge, the public service, forest, the mine, the shop or the farm, it should be found.
