FOUND NO FOUL PLAY EVIDENCE

After investigating rumors of foul play in the case of Thomas Burris, 78, who was found dead in bed at his home in Chesterville on Tuesday morning, Coroner H. L. Dodd, of Chestertown, who had ordered the funeral services postponed on Thursday, permitted the funeral to be held Saturday, after finding there was no truth in the reports that the man may have been the victim of foul play.

Coroner Dodd learned on Thursday morning that there were suspicions of probable attempts to rob the home of the man who lived alone, but there were no evidence of foul play on the body and the coroner permitted burial.

Funeral services were held at one o'clock Saturday afternoon, conducted by Rev. David Walraven, of Millington, with interment in Chesterville Cemetery.

Whether the results of the recent elections in many States is a victory for the "Wets" or the "Drys" is debatable. Local conditions and personalities many times enter into, and are powerful factors in electing men to office. On the whole we see little or no cause to be alarmed at the cry of victory from the Wets. This Country of ours is dry as a whole and the time will never come in our time when the good people of this land will return to the days of old. Any modification is just a step backward and an opening wedge for the saloon Forward should be the slogan of everyone. Enforcement is possible if the large liquor producer is caught and punished properly. Cut the root and the tree will die. It is a waste of time to trim the branches and it is a waste of time and money also to capture the small fellow. Know Prohibition and learn of its benefits before weighing in the balance the question.—Cecil Whig.
