FIREMAN FLIES FOR UNIFORM

Anothersplit -second's delay would have ruined the firemen's parade Friday. Just a slip-up in modern methods of transportation and there wouldn't have been any parade—for Benny.

Benny is the snare drummer in the Chestertown Volunteers' Band. On the way over from Chestertown for the event for which preparations had been made over the whole State for weeks in advance, Benny looked around on the Tolchester ferry and realized suddenly he had left uniform behind on the pier.

He made known his discovery to his companions and all he got was condilences until Howard Pennington, a brother smoke eater, suggested an airplane ride from Baltimore to Chestertown and got for his suggestion a laugh.

As the boat put the miles behind it in the bay one or two of Pennington's critics experienced a change of heart and, with the heartbreak of Benny preying on the jubilance of the holiday occasion, they agreed that Pennington's idea might not be a bad one, after all.

When the Express docked at Light street Pennington, who had been elected to make the trip because it was his suggestion, was soon on a telephone chartering a plane.

A taxi was called and in a few minutes he was on his way to a flying field at Smith and Green Spring avenues.

The deal for the air trip was closed and sixteen minutes after the take-off Edward Barber, the pilot, taxied down the Chestertown airport field. Other telephonic communications had been made and Benny's uniform was waiting for them at the field.

Twelve minutes later Barber nosed his plane over the Green S Valley and before the engine had been brought to a stop in fron f the hangar Pennington was in the taxi, had been kept waiting, and on his way back to save the day for Benny.

By the time the taxi reached the center of town, the parade had been under way and the farther they went the more congestion they met.

Just as the Chestertown contingent wended its way down Mount Royal avenue to Cathedral street an opening was found and Pennington, with his bundle, dashed into the ranks of the band. The snare drums were missing, but Benny was walking in the rear.

Pennington tossed him the regalia. Without a second's loss, Benny was in the Chestertown department's ambulance, with curtains drawn, and when the unit swung into Cathedral street the uniformed and satisfied Benny's snare drum was adding its rhythmic beat to the gallant air of a march or triumph.

He Was Happy Man

Benny got away soon after the parade disbanded on the City Hall Plaza, but he was happy, his friends said. Fifty or more of the Chestertown contingent were asked his last name and the reply invariably was: "Well, all I know him by is Benny. But he's the best snare drummer in the United States."

About 2,000 firemen took part in the parade, which brought to a close the three-day convention of the Maryland State Firemen's Association. Practically every community in the State and some in Virginia and Delaware were represented by delegations or engines. Nearly 100 pieces of apparatus, many brought from distant points, were in line.

As soon as the parade had ended prizes were awarded by Pinkney W. Wilkinson, secretary to the Fire Board, as follows:

The prize for the company coming the longest distance with twenty-five members present went to Crisfield.

Company coming the longest distance outside of Maryland with twenty-five or more men, Niagra Hose Company, Merchantsville, N. J.
