Hero Of War Given Recognition

John Sullivan, leader of a military campaign against the Iroquois 150 years ago, which resulted in the opening up of the Genesee country of western New York, has been honored by a special commemorative stamp of two cent denomination.

In 1772, when he was thirty-two, Sullivan became a major in the New Hampshire militia, and two years later was appointed to the provincial assembly of that colony. His first important military victory was won in 1774, when he and John Langdon captured Fort William and Mary at Newcastle. In August, 1776, he was made major general in the Continental army.

At the battle of Long Island Sullivan was captured by the British. Released on parole, he bore a message from Lord Howe to the Continental congress, which led to the fruitless conference on Staten island.

After being exchanged he succeeded Gen. Charles Lee as commander of Washington's right wing and later took part in many battles, among them the battles of Trenton, Brandywine and Germantown. He also took part in an attack on Newport and in other engagements in the Revolutionary war.

After resigning from the army he became active in politics and served in many offices. He died in 1795.—New York Times.

Music Students Excel in Alertness of Mind

One of the claims made for music is that it quickens the mental processes. This contention is right.

Students of music are invariably better advanced in the thinking line than those who have no interest in musical affairs. Furthermore, our association with musicians has caused us to marvel at the alertness of their minds when applied to problems other than music. At repartee none is quicker than the tongue of the musician. Von Bulow's wit, for example, was instantaneous. His rivals could never get the best of him. Of one of William Sterndale Bennett's compositions he once said: "It is so much like Mendelssohn that one might have thought Sir Julius Benedict had written it." Of Mascagani he said: "He has in his predecessor, Verdi, his own successor, who will live long after him." Once when sailing on an ocean liner he looked longingly at the musicians and remarked: "How lucky those fellows are? They can eat their lunch without music."

Von Bulow was only one of thousands of musicians whose wits have sparkled continuously.

World's Coal Fields

North America, Europe and Asia have the greatest coal fields in the world. The coal fields of China are vast and of great promise, but are still practically untouched. North America surpasses all the continents in the extent and variety of its fuel supplies and the United States leads the world in coal production. There is little prospect of any country surpassing it before that far-distant day when the great coal fields of China are well opened. The coal resources of the United States are 51.8 per cent of the total for the entire world, which in 1925 was estimated at 7,685,000 metric tons.

Pretty Italian Legend

A peasant bell ringer of early days in Italy, writes Satis N. Coleman in his book, "Bells," was so devoted to the large bell which he rang every day that when orders were given for it to be kept silent for a time, his grief was unbearable. He climbed to the belfry, threw his arms about the bell, and wept. Leaning against it he wailed so bitterly and so loudly, and the sound of his voice was so intensified by the metal, that his wailing was heard like the mournful ringing of a bell all over the city and far out into the country beyond. There he died, so the story goes, brokenhearted, still clinging to his beloved bell.

Didn't Want to Be Cured

It happened in the waiting room of the Melbourne hospital. He was a full-blooded aboriginal, unversed in the ways of white doctors. He turned to the hefty youth sitting on his left and questioned him about his complaint.

"I got crook tonsils and they're goin' to be cut out," said the youth.

The abo. goggled, then turned to the laborer on his right. "What you got?" he asked.

"Gotter 'ave me arm off—me wrist's poisoned."

Binghi made a bolt for the door. "I got it headache!" he gasped as he ran.—Sydney Bulletin.

But Not Voting

A Scotch clergyman had a parishioner who was a rabid politician with distinct democratic leanings. One day when the parson called he was told of a new litter of kittens.

"And do you think they'll be interested in politics?"

"'Deed, yes, sir. They're conservatives."

The parson was surprised, and even more so on his next visit, for he was informed they were liberals.

"Why this change, John?"

"Och," said the old fellow, with a wink. "They've had their eyes open since you were here last."—Sporting and Dramatic.

Brother Hen's Offering

Not to be outdone by the other parishioners of Little Timberden church, Shoreham, England, who were preparing for a harvest thanksgiving, an old brown hen laid two eggs in the chancel

Club Atmosphere Best for Little Poker Game

Many of the boys in the city council are not averse to a friendly game of "five and ten," and so a few of them were sitting around a circular table at the home of a friend the other night. The wife thought it would be a kindly and popular thing to give the boys a sandwich or two and she busied herself like any perfect hostess would do.

The sandwiches came, but the boys hardly knew what the filling was, as they were too occupied looking for the third ace or trying to find the fifth club. The dear lady didn't know it, but it's not ethical to interrupt that kind of a game.

A little later she happened to think that the baby had just reached the cute age and she knew the "gang" would only be tickled to death to see him perform. So she toted out the little fellow, who put on his act to an unsympathetic audience.

"I guess we will play the next game at the club," one of the boys remarked, and there was a heartfelt chorus of "Amen."—Brockton Enterprise.

About where would a fellow have to go these days to get a stone in his shoe?
